Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.
2. A bishop superior to archbishops.
The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Raleigh.
Where secular primates were heretofore given, the ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe's Patergon.
PATRIARCHAL, adj. [patriarchal, Fr. from patriarch.]
1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.
Such drowsy sedentary souls have they Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clay, Norris.
And know no climate but their own.
Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.
2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.
Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHATE, n. f. [patriarchat, Fr. from patriarch.] A patriarchship; bishopric superior to archbishoprics.
Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship and archbishopric. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHY, n. f. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate.
Calabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brown's PATRICIAN, adj. [patrien, Fr. patrius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

PAT

- I see
Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field,
His horse's hoofs wet with patrician blood! Addison.
- PATRICIAN, n. f. A nobleman.
Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms. Shakep.
You'll find Gracchus, from patrician grown
A sencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.
Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.
PATRIMONIAL, adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimonium.] Possessed by inheritance.
The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.
Their patrimonial cloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.
PATRIMONY, n. f. [patrimonium, Latin; patrimoine, Fr.]
An estate possessed by inheritance.
Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid
the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.
So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one great a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.
In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton's Par. Lost.
For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton's Agonist.
Their ships like waisted patrimonies flew;
Where the thin scatt'ring trees admit the light,
And thun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.
The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.
PATRIOT, n. f. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.
Patriots who for sacred freedom stood,
The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison's Cato.
Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.
PATRIOTISM, n. f. [from patriot.] Love of one's country;
zeal for one's country.
TO PATROCINATE, v. a. [patrocinor, Latin; patrocinor, old French.] To patronize; to protect; to defend. Dict.
PATROL, n. f. [patrouille, patrouille, old French.]
1. The act of going the rounds in a garison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.
O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the faving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson's Summer.
TO PATROL, v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garison.
Their out guards of the mind are sent abroad
And still patrolling beat the neighb'ring road,
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackmore.
PATRON, n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Latin.]
1. One who countenances, supports or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.
I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakep.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.
2. A guardian saint.
Thou amongst those saints, whom thou do'st see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Fairy Queen, b. i.
St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion.
3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.
We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.
Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and numbers, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.
4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.
PATRONAGE, n. f. [from patron.]
1. Support; protection.
Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune,
the only rebellious handmaid against virtue. Sidney.
Here's patronage, and here our art derides,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the cloister ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain. Creech.
And how too often we may court in vain. 2. Guardianship

PAT

2. Guardianship of saints.
From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman Catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.
3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.
TO PATRONAGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To patronize; to protect. A bad word.
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?
Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage. Shakep.
The envious barking of your faucy tongue.
An out-law in a castle keeps, Shakep.
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakep.
PATRONAL, adj. [from patronus, Lat.] Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.
The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PATRONESS, n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Latin.]
1. A female that defends, countenances or supports.
Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,
When with two truly maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Pope.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the fove-reign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.
Beside me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.
It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.
2. A female guardian saint.
TO PATRONISE, v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.
Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work fake, and protected from censure; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Dan.
All tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South's Sermons.
I have been esteemed and patronised by the grandfather, the father and the son. Dryden.
PATRONYMICK, n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tyndales, the son of Tydeus.
It ought to be rendered the son, Teslonides being a patronymick. Broome.
PATRON OF A PILLAR, n. f. Its base. Ainsworth.
PATTEMAKER, n. f. [patte and maker.] He that makes patterns.
PATTE, n. f. [patin, Fr.] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women to keep them from the dirt.
Their shoes and patens are flouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call crackwows, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Camden's Remains.
Good housewives
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking patens tread. Gay.
TO PATTER, v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.
Pat'ring hail comes pouring on the main, Dryden.
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.
PATTE, n. f. [patron, Fr. patron, Dutch.]
1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.
As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.
I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will lay nothing. Shakep. King Lear.
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakep. Henry VIII.
The example and pattern of the church of Rome: Claren.
Lose not the honour you have early won,
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power.
This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury's Sermons.
Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern, than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.
Take pattern by your sister star,
Delude at once and blest our sight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

PAU

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.
A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.
3. An instance; an example.
What God did command touching Canaan, the same con-cerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.
4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.
TO PATTERN, v. a. [patroner, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.
Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes. Shakep.
2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.
When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakep.
PA'VAN, n. f. A kind of light tripping dance. Ainsl.
PAVIN, n. f. [pauciloquium, Lat.] Sparing and rare speech.
PAUCITY, [paucitas, from paucus, Latin.]
1. Fewness; smallness of number.
The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.
In such slender corpules as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpules. Boyle.
Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.
2. Smallness of quantity.
This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals:
as, lizards, frogs and other fishes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PAVE, v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]
1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.
Should the kneel down,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror. Shakep.
Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.
From this chymic flame
I see a city of more precious mold,
With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryden.
The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.
2. To make a passage easy.
It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bac.
PAVEMENT, n. f. [pavimentum, Lat.] Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor.
The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd Into his radiant roof. Shakep. Cymbeline.
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.
The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.
The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement, but a double one. Arbutnot on Coins.
PAVER, n. f. [from pave.] One who lays with stones.
PAVIER, n. f. [from pave.] One who lays with stones.
For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
Whilst ev'ry stroke his lab'ring lungs rebound. Gay.
PAVILLION, n. f. [pavillon, French.] A tent; a temporary or moveable house.
Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavillon, and the flowers to the trees a mosaic floor. Sidney.
She did lie
In her pavillon, cloth of gold, of tiffue. Shakep.
He, only he, heaven's blest pavilion spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandys.
It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand by a trumpet in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion.
Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.
The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and thronds
Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.
TO PAVILLION, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with tents.
Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milton.
2. To be sheltered by a tent.
With his beating flocks the careful swain
Abides pavilion'd on the grassy plain.
PAUNCH, n. f. [pauch, French; paucha, Spanish; panx, Latin.]
The belly; the region of the guts.
Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard;
Antipater would say of him, that he was like a facifier, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.

PAW

Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat pawch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.
To PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to exenterate; to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.

PAUSE. n. f. [paufe, Fr. pausa, low Latin; pausa.]
1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.
Neither could we ever come to any pauses, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and intreats his paufe. Shaksp.
Some paufe and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.
The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.
Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little paufe of joys
In those great moments, when their god employs Their ministry. Prior.
What paufe from woe, what hopes of comfort bring
The names of wife or great. Prior.
Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries.
Addison's Spectator, N^o 133.
2. Suspense; doubt.
Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in paufe where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. Shaksp. Hamlet.
3. Break; paragraph; apparent separation of the parts of a discourse.
He writes with warmth, which usually neglects method, and those partitions and pauses which men, educated in the schools, observe. Locke.
4. Place of suspending the voice marked in writing.
5. A stop or intermission in music.
To PAUSE. v. n.
1. To wait; to stop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time.
Tarry; paufe a day or two,
Before you hazard: for in chusing wrong
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shaksp.
Give me leave to read philosophy.
And, while I paufe, serve in your harmony: Shaksp.
Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd. Milton.
2. To deliberate.
Bear Worcester to death, and Vernon too.
Other offenders we will paufe upon. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Solyman pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, suffered himself to be intreated. Kneller.
3. To be intermitted.
What awe did the flow solemn knell inspire,
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickell.
PAUSER. n. f. [from paufe.] He who pauses; he who deliberates.
The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser, reason. Shaksp. Macbeth.
PAW. n. f. [parven, Welsh.]
1. The foot of a beast of prey.
One chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might sure seize them both Grip'd in each paw. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The bee and serpent know their stings, and the bear the use of his paws. Mare's Divisions against Atreus.
If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Estrange.
Each claims possession,
Both their paws are fastened on the prey. Dryden.
2. Hand. In contempt.
Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.
To PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.
The fiery courser, when he hears from far,
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight
Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight. Dryden.
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain,
Hills, vales, and floods appear already crost'd,
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.
Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his hoof, struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shaksp.
Let's lead him on with a fine baited delay, 'till he hath pawn'd his horses. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Pawn me to this your honour, he is his. Shaksp.
I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shaksp.
Will you thus break your faith?—
I pawn'd you none. Shaksp. Henry IV.
I promis'd you redress. Shaksp. Henry IV.
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left To save the innocent. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
If any thought annoys the gallant youth,
'Tis dear remembrance of that fatal glance,
For which he lately pawn'd his heart. Waller.
She who before had mortgag'd her estate,
And pawn'd the last remaining piece of plate. Dryden.
One part of the nation is pawned to the other, with hardly a possibility of being ever redeemed. Swift.
PA'WN-BROKER. n. f. [pawn and broker.] One who lends money upon pledge.
The usurers or money-changers were a sort of a scandalous employment at Rome; those money-scavengers seem to have been little better than our pawnbrokers. Arbutnot.
To PAY. v. a. [paie, Fr. apagar, Spanish; pacare, Lat.]
1. To discharge a debt.
You have done enough, and have perform'd
A faint-like sorrow; and indeed paid down
More penitence, than done trespass. Shaksp.
Your ion has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man. Shaksp.
She does what she will, say what she will, take all, pay
all. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To dismiss one to whom any thing is due with his money.
3. To atone; to make amends by suffering; with for before the cause of payment.
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shaksp.
Bold Prometheus, whose untam'd desire Rival'd the sun with his own heav'nly fire,
Now doom'd the Scythian vulture's endless prey, Severely pays for animating clay. Roscommon.
Men of parts, who were to act according to the result of their debates, and often pay for their mistakes with their heads, found those scholastick forms of little use to discover truth. Locke.
4. To beat.
I follow'd me close, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shaksp. Henry IV.
5. To reward; to recompense.
Forty things more,
For which, or pay me quickly, or I'll pay you. B. Johnson.
She I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well; and pays me with disdain. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
6. To give

PEA

6. To give the equivalent for any thing bought.
Riches are got by confuming less of foreign commodities, than what by commodities or labour is paid for. Locke.
PAY. n. f. [from the verb.] Wages; hire; money given in return for service.
Come on, brave soldiers, doubt not of the day;
And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. Shaksp.
The soldier is willing to be converted, for there is neither pay nor plunder to be got. L'Estrange.
Money, instead of coming over for the pay of the army, has been transmitted thither for the pay of those forces called from thence. Temple.
Here only merit constant pay receives,
Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives. Pope.
PAYABLE. adj. [payable, Fr. from pay.]
1. Due; to be paid.
The marriage-money, the prince's brought, was payable ten days after the solemnization. Bacon's Henry VII.
The farmer rates or compounds the sums of money payable to her majesty, for the alienation of lands, made without or by licence. Bacon.
2. Such as there is power to pay.
To repay by a return equivalent, is not in every one's power; but thanks are a tribute payable by the poorest. South.
PAYDAY. n. f. [pay and day.] Day on which debts are to be discharged or wages paid.
Labourers pay away all their wages, and live upon trust till next payday. Locke.

PAYMASTER. n. f. [pay and master.] One who is to pay;
one from whom wages or reward is received.
Howsoever they may bear fail for a time, yet are they so sure paymasters in the end, that few have held out their lives faily. Hayward.
If we desire that God should approve us, it is a sign we do his work, and expect him our paymaster. Taylor.
PAYMENT. n. f. [from pay.]
1. The act of paying.
2. The discharge of debt or promise.
Thy husband commits his body
To painful labour both by sea and land,
And craves no other tribute at thy hands
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt. Shaksp.
Persons of eminent virtue, when advanced, are less envid, for their fortune seemeth but due unto them; and no man envieth the payment of a debt. Bacon.
3. A reward.
Give her an hundred marks.
—An hundred marks! by this light I'll ha' more.
An ordinary groom is for such payment. Shaksp.
The wages that fin bargains with the sinner, are life, pleasure and profit; but the wages it pays him with, are death, torment and destruction: he that would understand the falsehood and deceit of fin thoroughly, must compare its promises and its payments together. South's Sermons.
4. Chastisement; flogging.
To PAYSE. v. n. [Used by Spenser for paice.] To balance.
Ne was it iland then, ne was it payes'd
Amid the ocean waves, Fairy Queen.
But was all desolate.

ward ease, to be more careful to avoid everlasting torment than light afflictions. Tilley's Sermons.
8. Silence; suppression of the thoughts.
'Twill out;—I peace!
No, I will speak as liberal as the air. Shaksp. As You Like It.
In an examination, a freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very faulcy had almost all the words; and amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the exa-minates, who was a freed servant of Scribonianus; I pray, Sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? he answered, I would have stood behind his chair and held my peace. Bacon.
She said; and held her peace: Æneas went. Dryden.
Sad from the cave.
PEACE. interjection. A word commanding silence.
Peace! fear, thou comest too late, when already the arm is taken. Sidney, b. ii.
Hark! peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern 't good night. Shaksp.
Peace, good reader do not weep;
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
They, sweet turtles, folded lie,
In the last knot that love could tie.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whole day shall never sleep in night. Crawshaw.
But peace, I must not quarrel with the will Of highest dispensation. Milton's Agonistes.
Silence, ye troubled waves, and, thou deep, peace!
Said then th' omisc word. Milton.
I prythee peace!
Perhaps she thinks they are too near of blood. Dryden.
PEACE-OFFERING. n. f. [peace and offer.] Among the Jews,

They were ſaluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.
The breach of faith cannot be ſo highly expreſſed, as in that it ſhall be the laſt peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon's Essays.
Woods of oranges will ſmell into the ſea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, ſince a peal of ordinance will do as much, which moveth in a ſmall compaſs? Bacon.
A peal ſhall rouse their ſleep;
Then all thy faints aſſembled, thou ſhalt judge Bad men and angels. Mit. Par. Reg.
I myſelf,
Vanquiſh'd with a peal of words, O weakneſs;
Gave up my fort of ſilence to a woman. Milton.
From the Moors camp the noiſe grows louder fill;
Peals of ſhouts that rend the heav'n's,
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, ſea and air, and heaven and Cato tremble! Adity.
2. It is once uſed by Shaksp. for a low dull noiſe, but improperly.
Ere to black Hecat's ſummons
The ſhard-born beetle with his drowly hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there ſhall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shaksp. Macbeth.
To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play ſolemnly and loud.
Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below,
In ſervice high and anthems clear,
As may with ſweetneſs through mine ear,
Diſſolve me into ecſtaſies,
And bring all heav'n before my eyes. Milton.
The pealing organ, and the paſſing choir;
And the laſt words, that duſt to duſt convey'd. Titchell.
To PEAL. v. a.
1. To aſſail with noiſe.

PEARL. n. f. [perle, Fr. perla, Spaniſh; ſupported by Salmalius to come from pheralia, Latin.]
Pearls, though eſteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a diſtemper in the creature that produces them: the fiſh in which pearls are moſt frequently found is the Eaſt Indian berbes or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; but the Indian pearls are ſuperior to all: ſome pearls have been known of the ſize of a pigeon's egg; as they increaſe in ſize, they are leſs frequent and more valued: the true ſhape of the pearl is a perfect round; but ſome of a conſiderable ſize are of the ſhape of a pear, and ſerve for ear-rings: their colour ought to be a pure, clear and brilliant white, and they bring their natural poliſh with them, to which art can never attain: it is reported, that this tinge never grows deeper, and that the luſtre of the pearl never fades, which is therefore juſtly preferred by the Orientals to ſuch as are purely white: from the name unio given to the pearl, ſome have been led to believe, that there was only one found in each ſhell; this is indeed uſually the caſe in oysters and muſcles; but in the oriental pearl ſhell fix or eight are frequent, and ſometimes twenty or more. Hill.
A pearl-juſep was made of a diſtilled milk. Wifeman.
Flow'rs purled, blue and white,
Like ſaphire, pearl, in rich embroidery Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee. Shaksp.

With a pick-ax of iron about sixteen inches long, sharpened at the one end to pecks, and flat headed at the other to drive little iron wedges to cleave rocks. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
4. To strike; to make blows.
Two contrary factions, both inveterate enemies of our church, which they are perpetually pecking and striking at with the same malice. South's Sermon.
They will make head against a common enemy, whereas mankind lie pecking at one another, till they are torn to pieces. L'Estrange.
5. The following passage is perhaps more properly written to peck, to throw.
Get up o' th' rail, I'll peck you o'er the pales else. Shakespeare.
PECKER. n. f. [from peck.]
1. One that pecks.
2. A kind of bird: as, the wood-pecker.
The timoufe and the peckers hungry brood,
And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood. Dryden.
PECKLED. adj. [corrupted from speckled.] Spotted; varied with spots.
Some are peckled, some greenish. Walton's Angler.
PECTINAL. n. f. [from pecten, Lat. a comb.]
There are other fishes whose eyes regard the heavens, as plain and cartilaginous fishes, as pectinals, or such as have their bones made laterally like a comb. Brown.
PECTINATED. adj. [from pecten.] Put one within another alternately. This seems to be the meaning.
To fit cross leg'd or with our fingers pectinated, is accounted bad. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PECTINATION. n. f. The state of being pectinated.
The complication of pectination of the fingers was an hieroglyphic of impediment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PECTORAL. adj. [from pectoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the breast.
Being troubled with a cough, pectorals were prescribed, and he was thereby relieved. Wifeman.
PECTORAL. n. f. [pectorale, Lat. pectoral, Fr.] A breast plate.
PECULATE. n. f. [peculatus, Latin; peculat, Fr.] Robbery of the public; theft of publick money.
PECULATOR. [Latin.] Robber of the publick.
PECULIAR. adj. [peculiaris, from peculium, Lat. pecule, Fr.]
1. Appropriate, belonging to any one with exclusion of others.
I agree with Sir William Temple, that the word humour is peculiar to our English tongue; but not that the thing itself is peculiar to the English, because the contrary may be found in many Spanish, Italian and French productions. Swift.
2. Not common to other things.

PED

The only sacred hymns they are that christianity hath peu- liar unto itself, the other being songs too of praise and of thanksgiving, but songs wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hosier, b. v. f. 39.
Space and duration being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may be of use for their illustration. Locke.
3. Particular; single. To join peu with peculiar, though found in Dryden, is improper.
One peculiar nation to select From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd. Milton.
I neither fear, nor will provoke the war;
My fate is Juno's most peculiar care. Dryden.
PECULIAR. n. f.
1. The property; the exclusive property.
By tincture or reflection, they augment Their small peculiar. Milt. Par. Lof.
Revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration whatever can empower even the best men to assume the execution of it. South's Sermon.
2. Something abridged from the ordinary jurisdiction.
Certain peculiar there are, some appertaining to the digni-ties of the cathedral church at Exon. Carew.
PECULIARITY. n. f. [from peculiar.] Particularity; something found only in one.
If an author possessed any distinguishing marks of style or peculiarity of thinking, there would remain in his least succe-ful writings some few tokens whereby to discover him. Swift.
PECUNIARY. adv. [from pecunia.]
1. Particularly; singly.
That is pecuniary the effect of the sun's variation. Wadde.
2. In a manner not common to others.
PECUNIARY. adj. [pecuniarius, from pecunia, Lat. pecuniarius, Fr.]
1. Relating to money.
Their impostures delude not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown.
2. Consisting of money.
Pain of infamy is a fever punishment upon ingenious natures than a pecuniary mult. Bacon.
The injured person might take a pecuniary mult by way of atonement. Brown.
PED. n. f.
1. A small packfiddle. A ped is much shorter than a pannel, and is raised before and behind, and serves for small burdens.
2. A pannel and wanty, packfiddle and ped. Tusser.
3. A basket; a hamper.
A hawk is a wicker ped, wherein they use to carry fish. Spens.
PEDAGOGICAL. adj. [from pedagogue.] Suited or belonging to a schoolmaster.
PEDAGOGUE. n. f. [pedagogus, Lat. παιδαγωγός, païs and agōs.] One who teaches boys; a schoolmaster; a pedant.
Few pedagogues but curse the barren chair,
Like him who hang'd himself for mere despair. Dryden.
And poverty. Dryden.
To PEDAGOGUE. v. a. [παιδαγωγέω, from the noun.] To teach with superciliousness.
This may confine their younger stiles,
Whom Dryden pedagogues at Will's;
But never could be meant to tie
Authentic wits, like you and I. Prior.
PEDAGOGY. n. f. [παιδαγωγία.] The mastership; discipline.
In time the reason of men ripening to such a pitch, as to be above the pedagogy of Moses's rod and the discipline of types, God thought fit to display the substance without the shadow. South's Sermon.
PEDAL. adj. [pedalis, Lat.] Belonging to a foot.
PEDALS. n. f. [pedalis, Lat. pedales, Fr.] The large pipes of an organ: so called because played upon and stopt with the foot. Diä.
PEDANEUS. adj. [pedaneus, Lat.] Going on foot. Diä.
PEDANT. n. f. [pedant, French.]
1. A schoolmaster.
A pedant that keeps a school i' th' church. Shakespeare.
The boy who scarce has paid his entrance down
To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.
2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly offen-tious of his literature.
The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Clanville.
The preface has so much of the pedant, and so little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.
In learning gets a mistress by't. Swift.
PEDANTIC. adj. [pedantique, Fr. from pedant.] Awkwardly ostentatious of learning.
Mr. Cheek had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues;
but for other sufficiencies pedantic enough. Hayward.
When we see any thing in an old satyr, that looks forced and pedantic, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.
The obscurity is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obscure by their pedantic elucidators. Felon.
A spirit

PEE

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantic and hateful, that a man should watch against every influence of it. Watt.
We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun-rise and sun-set, and not introduce a new pedantic description of them from the motion of the earth. Bentley's Sermons.
PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantic.] With awkward ostentation of literature.
The earl of Roscommon has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantically; 'tis a faith like that,
which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.
PEDANTRY. n. f. [pedanterie, Fr.] Awkward ostentation of needless learning.
'Tis a practice that favours much of pedantry, a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school. Brown.
Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Crowl.
Make us believe it, if you can: it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non persuadebis, timidi perijurati. Addison's Freeholder.
From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.
To PEDDLE. v. n. To be busy about trifles. Ains. It is commonly written peddle: as, what peddling work is here.
PEDERERO. n. f. [pederero, Spanish, from pedra, a stone with which they charged it.] A small cannon managed by a swivel. It is frequently written paterero.
PEDISTAL. n. f. [pedestal, Fr.] The lower member of a pillar; the basis of a statue.
The poet bawls
And shakes the statues and the pedestals. Dryden.
In the centre of it was a grim idol; the forefront of the pedestal was curiously embossed with a triumph. Addison.
So stiff, so mute, some statue you would swear Slept from its pedestal to take the air. Pope.
PEDIVARIOUS. adj. [pedivarius, Latin.] Not winged; going on foot.
Men conceive they never lie down, and enjoy not the position of rest, ordained unto all pedivarius animals. Brown.
PEDICULE. n. f. [from pedis, Lat. pedicula, Fr.] The footstalk, that by which a leaf or fruit is fixed to the tree.
The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves and pedicles. Bacon.
PEDICULAR. adj. [pedicularis, Lat. pedicularis, Fr.] Having the phytical or lousy distemper. Anfworth.
PEDIGREE. n. f. [pere and degre, Skinner.] Genealogy; lineage; account of descent.
I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees, it sufficeth me if I know their virtues. Sidney.
You tell a pedigree
Of threefold and two years, a filly time. Shakespeare.
Alterations of surnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce many of them. Cam.
To the old heroes hence was giv'n
A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n. Waller.
The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Atter.
PEDIMENT. n. f. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows and niches:
it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Diä.
PEDLER. n. f. [a party dealer; a contradiction produced by frequent use.] One who travels the country with small commodities.
All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truffle of trifles at his back;
As bells and babies and glassies in his pack. Spenser.
If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakespeare.
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and walfalls, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakespeare.
Had fly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.
A narrow education may begot among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.
Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back,
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.
PEDLERY. adj. [from pedler.] Wares sold by pedlers.
The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to sell. Swift.
PEDDLING. adj. Petty dealing; such as pedlers have.
So slight a pleasure I may part with, and find no miss; this peddling profit I may resign, and 'twill be no breach in my estate. Decay of Piety.
PEDOBAPTISM. n. f. [παιδοs and βαπτισμα.] Infant baptism.
PEDOBAPTIST. n. f. [παιδοs and βαπτιστης.] One that holds or practises infant baptism.

PEE

To PEEL. v. a. [peeler, Fr. from pellis.]
1. To decorticate; to flay.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands, Shakespeare.
And stuck them up before the fullsome ewes.
2. [From pillor, to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this should be written pill.
Who once just and temperate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke.
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
But lust and rapine. Milton's Paradise Regained.
Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitors, are thy talents. Dryden.
PEEL. n. f. [pellis, Latin; pelure, French.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.
PEEL. n. f. [paule, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.
PEELER. n. f. [from peel.]
1. One who strips or flays.
2. A robber; a plunderer.
Yet otes with her sucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the master and worse to some ground. Tusser.
As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from ophellen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Cassaubon, who derives it from ovariu, a peep; perhaps it may come from pip, pipis, Latin, to cry as young birds:
which the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]
1. To make the first appearance.
She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Pa. Queen.
Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an untrain'd shepherd. Shakespeare.
England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
The timorous maiden-blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from their first blushes; so that now
A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedily eye that stood. Croshaw.
With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.
Earth, but not at once, her visage rears;
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryden.
Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear, }
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryd. } Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world; and the restorers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.
Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.
Most souls but peep out once an age,
Dull fullen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.
2. To look sily, closely or curiously; to look through any crevice.
Who is the same, which at my window peeps. Spenser.
Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the darks,
To cry hold. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakespeare.
A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclus. xxi. 23.
The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.
All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryden.
The

PEE

The daring flames peep in, and saw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophand by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.
From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.
Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.
O my muse, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior.
In vain his little children peeping out Into the mingling storm, demand their fire. Thomson.
PEEP, n. f.
1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.
2. A fly look.
Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t' other peep at the stars. Swift.
PEEPER, n. f. Young chickens just breaking the shell.
PEEPHOLE, n. f. [from peep and hole.] Hole through which PEEPINGHOLE, n. f. one may look without being discovered.
By the peepholes in his cress,
Is it not virtually confessed,
That there his eyes took distant aim. Prior.
The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange.
PEER, n. f. [from peer, French.]
1. Equal; one of the same rank.
His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shaksp.
Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity;
and therefore it is good a little to keep late. Bacon.
Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him so great respect do'st bear!
That thou adorn'st him with so bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.
2. One equal in excellence or endowments.
In song he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chancicler. Dryden.
3. Companion; fellow.
He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Fairy Queen.
If you did move to-night,
In the dances, with what spirit
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion swell'd. Benj. Johnson.
Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryd.
4. A nobleman: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.
I see thee compass with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak me salutation in their minds:
Hail king of Scotland! Shaksp. Macbeth.
King Henry's peers and chief nobility Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shaksp.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.
To PEER, v. n. [By contraction from appear.]
1. To come just in sight.
As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Shaksp.
Yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shaksp. Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shaksp.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johnson.
Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milt.
2. To look narrowly; to peep.
Now for a cloud-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidn.
Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
PEERAGE, n. f. [from peer, Fr. from peer.]
1. The dignity of a peer.
His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for Lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.
2. The body of peers.
Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.
PEERDOM, n. f. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainsworth.
PEERLESS, n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

PEG

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peers and butler share alike the box. Page.
PEERLESS, adj. [from peer.] Unequaled; having no peer.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat,
We stand up peerless. Shaksp.
You,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best. Shaksp. Temp.
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shaksp.
Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, yet length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.
Such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise. Milton.
Whole lustre leads us.
Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With such a peerless majesty she stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.
PEERLESSNESS, n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.
PEEVISH, adj. [This word peevish, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from peevish, as we say peevish.] Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.
For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidn.
She is peevish, sulen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty.
If thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these faucy walls. Shaksp.
I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shaksp.
Those deserve to be doubly laugh'd at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estrange.
Neither will it be satire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift.
PEEVISHLY, adv. [from peevish.] Angriely; querulously; morosely.
He was so peevishly opiniative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.
PEEVISHNESS, n. f. [from peevish.] Irascibility; querulous-ness; fretfulness; perverseness.
Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others, envying the publick should be managed without them. King Charles.
It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.
You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.
PEG, n. f. [from pegge, Teutonic.]
1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.
Solid bodies foreflew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.
The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them caviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mullif.
Gray's Myiogram.
If he pretends to be choleric, we shall treat him like his little friend Dicky, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison's Guardian, N° 108.
The peg and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison's Spectator.
A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more vir-tuous or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift.
2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.
You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The pegs that make this music. Shaksp. Othello.
3. To take a PEG lower; to depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.
Remember how in arms and politics,
We still have worsted all your holy tricks,
Trepas'd your party with intrigues,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.
4. The nickname of Margaret.
To PEG, v. a. To fasten with a peg.
I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, 'till Thou'lt howl'd away twelve winters. Shaksp. Temp.
Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn's Kalendar.
PELF, n. f.

PEL

PELF, n. f. [In low Latin, peltra, not known whence derived;
peltra, in Norman, is trippery.] Money; riches.
The thought of this doth pass all worldly pelts. Sidn.
Hardy elf,
Thou dar'st view my direful countenance,
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious pelts. Fairy Queen.
Immortal gods, I crave no pelts;
I pray for no man but myself. Shaksp.
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelts
Soon split him on the former self:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.
To the poor if he refus'd his pelts,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.
PELICAN, n. f. [Pelicanus, low Lat. pellicanus, Fr.]
There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calnet.
Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shaksp.
The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the sice of apothecaries. Hakevill on Providence.
PELLET, n. f. [from pila, Lat. pelote, Fr.]
1. A little ball.
That which is sold to the merchants, is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sandys.
I defied with little pellets of lint. Wifeman's Surgery.
2. A bullet; a ball.
The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, left two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.
A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon.
How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground. L'Estrange.
In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Roy.
PELLETED, adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.
My brave Egyptians all,
By the descending of this pelleted storm, Lie graveless. Shaksp.
PELLICE, n. f. [Pellicula, Lat.]
1. A thin skin.
After the discharge of the fluid, the pellice must be broke.
Sharp's Surgery.
2. It is often used for the film which gathers upon liquors impregnated with salts or other substances, and evaporated by heat.
PELLITORY, n. f. [Parietaria, Lat.] An herb.
The pellitory hath an apetalous flower, whose flower cup is divided into four parts, which is sometimes bell-shaped like a funnel, with four stamina or threads surrounding the pointal, which becomes for the most part an oblong feed, surrounded by the flower cup; to which may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves. Miller.
PELLEME, n. f. [Pelle melle, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously;
one among another.
When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then defie each other, and pell mell
Make work upon ourselves. Shaksp. King John.
Never yet did insurrection want
Such moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pell mell havock and confusion. Henry IV.
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras.
PELLS, n. f. [Pellis, Lat.]
Clerk of the pelts, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pelts acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pelts eximium, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey.
PELLUCID, adj. [Pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opaque; not dark.
The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Woodward.
If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehement as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Opticks.

PEN

PELLUCIDITY, n. f. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clearness; not opacity.
The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the infensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke.
We consider their pellucidness and the vast quantity of light, that passes through them without reflection. Keil.
PELT, n. f. [from pellis, Lat.]
1. Skin; hide.
The camels hair is taken for the skin or pelts with the hair upon it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.
2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainsworth.
PELT-MONGER, n. f. [pellis, Lat. pelts and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.
To PELT, v. a. [poltern, German, Skimmer; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.] It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teasing frequency than destructive violence.
1. To strike with something thrown.
Poor naked wretches wheresoe'er you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shaksp.
Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelts the clouds. Dryden.
No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelts pope Joan. Dryden.
Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelts them from covers with little objections. Atterbury.
The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelts the metropolis to pieces. Gulliver.
2. To throw; to cast.
My Phillis me with pelts apples plices, Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.
PELTING, adj. This word in Shakspere signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.
Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shaksp.
Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shaksp.
They from sheepcotes and poor pelting villages Enforce their charity. Shaksp.
A tenement or pelting farm. Shaksp.
PELVIS, n. f. [Latin.] The lower part of the belly.
PEN, n. f. [penna, Latin.]
1. An instrument of writing.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shaksp.
Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of Adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.
He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.
I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pen, if my eyes be shut. Locke.
2. Feather.
The pens that did his pinnions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Fairy Queen.
3. Wing; though even here it may mean feather.
Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens; and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.
4. [From penna, Saxon.] A small inclosure; a coop.
My father stole two geese out of a pen. Shaksp.
The cook was ordered to dress capons for supper, and take the best in the pen. L'Estrange.
She in pens his flocks will fold. Dryden's Horace.
Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys num'rous as thy hens. King.
The gather'd flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable prest'd, Head above head. Thomson's Summer.
To PEN, v. a. [from penna and penna, Saxon.]
1. To coop; to shut up; to incage; to imprison in a narrow place.
Away with her,
And pen her up. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
My heavy son
Private in his chamber pens himself. Shaksp.
The plaster alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.
As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

PEN

In hurdled cotes, amid the field secure Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton.
The glass, wherein it is penned up, hinders it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.
The prevention of mischief is prescribed by the Jewish custom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey on Consumptions.
Ah! that your bus'ness had been mine,
To pen the sheep. Dryden.

2. [From the noun.] To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the stile or composition.

For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whole metal stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearty pictures, or a window look.
With one good dance or letter finely penn'd. Sidney.
I would be loth to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con-
it. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Read this challenge, mark but the penning of it. Shakespeare.
A sentence spoken by him in English, and penned out of his mouth by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthography, was set down by them. Camden's Remains.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes with his own hand. Hayward on Edward VI.

The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict examination, as the penning them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby on the Soul.

Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:
Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
The judges hearing with applause, at th' end Freed him, and said, no fool such lines had penn'd. Danb.

Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without penning of any thing. Locke.

Should I publish the praises that are so well penn'd, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.

Twenty fools I never saw Come with petitions fairly penn'd, Desiring I should stand their friend. Swift.

PE'NAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from pæna, Lat.]
1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.
Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as shall more effectually incline him to what is brave and becoming than the terror of any penal law. South.

2. Used for the purposes of punishment; vindictive.
Adamantive chains and penal fire. Milton.

PE'NALT. n. f. [from penalis, old French.]
PENALTY. n. f. [from penalis, old French.]

1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.
Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and some unto the penalty of contrary affirmations; but the experience of na-vigations, can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.

Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all penal laws, for preserving property, and employing the force of the community in the execution of laws. Locke.

Beneath her footstool, science groans in chains,
And wit dreads exile, penalties and pains. Dunciad.

2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.
Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
But lend it rather to thine enemy.
Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

PE'NNANCE. n. f. [penence, old French; for penitence.]
In fiction either public or private, suffered as an expression of repentance for sin.

And bitter penance, with an iron whip,
Was wont him once to discipline every day. Fairy Queen.

Mew her up.
And make her bear the penance of her tongue. Shakespeare.

No penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight penance, to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over the pursuit of his right. Bacon.

The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour Calls us to penance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A Lorain surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to perform this penance in a sharp fit he had. Temple.

PENCE. n. f. The plural of penny; formed from pennies, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.

The same servant found one of his fellow servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Mat.

PE'NCIL. n. f. [penicillum, Latin.]
1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.
Pencils can by one slight touch restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,
For thee the grasses lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready pencil paints the low'rs. Dryden.

PEN

A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pen on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.

The faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the matter's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.

One dips the pencil, t'other strings the lyre. Pope.

2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write without ink.

Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Watts.

3. Any instrument of writing without ink.

PEN

And let we wring your heart, for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

PENETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrabilis.] Susceptibility of impression from another body.

There being no mean between penetrability and impenetra-bility, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Boyle's Philosophical Principles.

PE'NETRANT. n. f. [penetrans, Latin.] Interior parts. Not in use.

The heart resists pungent fumes, into whose penetrants to infiltrate some time must be allowed. Harvey.

PE'NETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.

The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray on the Creation.

PE'NETRANT. adj. [penetrant, Fr.] Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The food, mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered to fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the straight offices of the lacteous veins. Ray.

TO PE'NETRATE. v. n. To penetrate, Lat. penetrare, Fr.]
1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.

Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetra- ting. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To affect the mind.

3. To reach the meaning.

TO PE'NETRATE. v. n. To make way.

There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to penetrate. Ray.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the infide and reality of the thing. Locke.

PE'NETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrare.]
1. The act of entering into any body.

The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unseen
Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who deluge either of the three learned professions. Watts.

3. Acuteness; sagacity.

The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.

PE'NETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]
1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.

Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any loggy noisomeness from fens. Watson.

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.

O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The fourth sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Having the power to impress the mind.

Wouldst thou see
Thy master thus with pleachit arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame. Shakespeare.

PE'NETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Latin.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined, that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras. Grew's Museum.

British Indians nam'd from penguins.
Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from penguin, Lat. fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.

The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness:
for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds: his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unuseful for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grew's Museum.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.

PENINSULA. n. f. [Lat. pena insula; peninsula, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

A side of Millbrook lieth the peninsula of Infwork, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Carew.

PE'NINSULATED. adj. [from peninsula.] Almost surrounded by water.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. penitentia, Lat.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendments of life or change of the affections.

Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom. Dryden.

May penitence fly round thy mournful bed,
And wing thy latest prayer to pitying heav'n. Irene.

PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. penitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and refo-lutely amending life.

Much it joys me
To see you become so penitent. Shakespeare.

The penitent instrument to pick that best.
Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent besought
The God of their forefathers. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves them penitent. Milton.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

PE'NITENT. n. f.
1. One sorrowful for sin.

Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose carcasses the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.

The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the appetites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force. Rogers's Sermons.

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.

The counterfeits Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded. Stillington.

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts and penitential groans. Shakespeare.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlic, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a delfed onion? Smith's Sermons.

PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitential, Fr. penitentialis, low Latin.]
A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitentials or book of penance contained such matters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation of the person that suffered penance. Ayliffe.

PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitenciar, Fr. penitentiarius, low Latin.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.

Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.

A prison restrained John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the same in his unruly mayoralty of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Carew.

To maintain a painful fight against the law of sin, is the work of the penitentiary. Hammond.

3. The place where penance is enjoined.

PENITENTLY. adv. [from penitent.] With repentance; with sorrow for sin; with contrition.

PENKITE. n. f. [pen and knife.] A knife used to cut pens.

Some schoolmen, fitter to guide penknives than swords, precisely stand upon it. Bacon.

PENMAN. n. f. [pen and man.]
1. One who professes the art of writing.

2. An author; a writer.

The four evangelists, within fifty years after our Saviour's death, configned to writing that history, which had been published only by the apostles and disciples: the further confideration of these holy penmen will fall under another part of this discourse. Addison on the Christian Religion.

The descriptions which the evangelists give, shew that both our blessed Lord and the holy penmen of his story were deeply affected. Atterbury.

PE'NNACHED. adj. [pennach, Fr.] Is only applied to flowers when the ground of the natural colour of their leaves is radiated and diversified neatly without any confusion. Trevoux.

Carefully protect from violent rain your pennach'd tulips, covering them with matrasles. Evelyn.

PE'NNANT. n. f.

PEN

2. A tackle for hoisting things on board.
PENNATED. adj. [pennatus, Latin.]
1. Winged.
2. Pennated, amongst botanists, are those leaves of plants as grow directly one against another on the same rib or stalk; as those of ash and walnut-tree. Quincy.
PENNER. n. f. [from pen.]
1. A writer.
2. A pence. Ans. So it is called in Scotland.
PENNYLESS. adj. [from penny.] Moneyless; poor; wanting money.
PENNON. n. f. [pennon, Fr.] A small flag or colour.
Her yellow locks crisped like golden wire,
About her shoulders weren loosely shed,
And when the wind amongst them did inspire,
They waved like a pennon wide difpred. Fairy Queen.
Harry sweeps through our land
With pennons painted in the blood of Harleur. Shaksp.
High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur. Dryden.
PENNY. n. f. plural pence. [penig, Saxon.]
1. A small coin, of which twelve make a shilling: a penny is the radical denomination from which English coin is numbered, the copper halfpence and farthings being only nummerum famul, a subordinate species of coin.
She fights and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
No silver penny to reward her pain. Dryden.
One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
Does at a penny's cost in herbs repine. Dryden.
2. Proverbially. A small sum.
You shall hear
The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Shaksp.
We will not lend thee a penny.
Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe. Taylor's Living Holy.
3. Money in general.
Pepper and Sabeen incense take;
And with post-haste thy running markets make;
Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.
It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny. Swift's Miscellanies.
PENNYROYAL, or pudding grose. n. f. [pulegium, Lat.]
Pennyroyal hath a labiated flower consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is entire, but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts; out of the flower cup rises the pointed attended by four embryos, which afterwards become to many seeds: to which may be added, that the flowers grow in short thick whorles. Miller.
PENNYWEIGHT. n. f. [penny and weight.] A weight containing twenty-four grains troy weight.
The Sevil piece of Eight is 1 pennyweight in the pound

On herbs and flowers she walked pensively.
Mild, but yet love she proudly did forsake. Spenser.
PENSIVENESS. n. f. [from pensive.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.
Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath pensiveness and fear, the other always joy annexed. Hooker, b. vi. f. 43.
Would'st thou unlock the door
To cold despair and gnawing pensiveness. Herbert.
PENT, part. pass. of pen. Shut up.

PENTECOST. n. f. [pentecost, Greek; pentecoste, Fr.] A feast among the Jews.
Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover; they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Calmer.
'Tis since the nuptial of Luceutio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will
Some five and twenty years. Shaksp.
PENTECOSTAL. adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitfun-

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon's Natural History.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long; for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Johnson.

Is this the confidence you gave me,
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrap up in a smooth period. Locke.

For the assistance of weak memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

From the tongue
Th' unfinished period falls. Thomson's Spring.

To PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

PERIODICAL. adj. [periodiques, Fr. from period.] 1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodical motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some slimy soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The contusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.

PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, and then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Brown.

PERIOSTEUM. n. s. [περι and στέον; periosteum, Fr.] All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Chene's Philosophical Principles.

PERIPHERY. n. s. [περι and φειν; periphery, Fr.] Circumference.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

To PERIPHERY. v. a. [periphraze, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERIPHRAIS. n. s. [περιφρασις; periphraze, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one; as, for death, we may say, the last of life.

They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphraze for this number seven. Brown.

She contains all blis,
And makes the world but her periphraze. Cleaveland.

They

PER

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphraze on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphraze and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.

PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphraze.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPNEUMONY. n. s. [περι and πνευμον; peripneumonie, Fr.] An inflammation of the lungs.

Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then deprehended schirous, by distipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that remain, or may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.

To PERISH. v. n. [peris, Fr. peris, Lat.] 1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing.

I burn, I pine, I perish. Shakespeare.

If I achieve not this young modest girl,
If I have seen any perish for want of cloathing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade. Job xxxi. 29.

He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job xxxiii. 18.

They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 18.

1 perish with hunger. Luke xv. 17.

The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.

Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the lust of tyrant power succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter ii. 12.

O suffer me not to perish in my sins, Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish. Morison's Daily Exercise.

To PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use.

The splitting rocks caw'd in the sinking fides;
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

Rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier on Friendship.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.

Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he seen the perishable kind Of men decay. Pope's Odyssey.

PERISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perishableness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge his possessions beyond the use of his family. Locke.

PERISTALTIC. adj. [περιστάλλω; peristaltique, Fr.] Peristaltic motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

The peristaltic motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbutnot.

PERISTERION. n. s. The herb vervain. Diad.

PERISTYLE. n. s. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars. The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbutnot on Coins.

PERISTOLE. n. s. [περι and στολή.] The pause or interval betwixt the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of diastole or dilatation. Diad.

PERITONEUM. n. s. [περιτοναιον; peritoneum, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin and soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diad.

Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wifeman.

PERJURE. n. s. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or forsworn person. A word not in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue, Thou art incofficious. Shakespeare, King Lear.

To PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Lat.] To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bottom. Shakespeare.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Tim. i. 10.

PERJURER. n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.

PERJURY. n. s. [perjurius, Lat.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud — What course for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence,
And so he vanish'd. Shakespeare, Richard III.

PERIWIG. n. s. [perriquet, Fr.] Aditious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakespeare.

It offends me to hear a robusitious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tresses
In lovers' fonnets. Donne.

Madam time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.

For vailing of their villages his highness and the marquis bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.

They used false hair or periwigs. Arbutnot on Coins.

From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes,
Which in the nicest fashion cutt'd,
Like toupets. Swift's Miscellaneous.

To PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To drest in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltic ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvestre.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crouded round with antick shapies,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful frides she takes. Swift's Miscellaneous.

PERIWINKLE. n. s.

1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish snail.

Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevelled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and scallop shells. Peasblossom.

2. A plant.

The periwinkle hath a flower cup, consisting of one leaf, that is divided into five long narrow segments; the flower also consists of one leaf, which expands in form of a falver, and is cut into five broad segments: the point, which arises from the center of the flower cup, becomes a fruit composed of two huffs or pods, which contain oblong cylindrical, furrowed seeds; to which may be added, that this plant shoots out many long creeping branches that strike out roots at their joints. Miller.

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.

The common similes with us are comfrey, bugle, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wifeman's Surgery.

To PERK.

PER

TO PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected bristled.
If you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's mits thus perks it in your face,
To see a piece of falling flesh and blood,
Let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crouds, and stare the frumpet down. Pope.
TO PERK. v. a. To drels; to prank.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glitt'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
PERK. adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.
My ragged ronts
Went in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails, Peak as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenser.

PERMANENCY. n. f. [from permanent.] Duration; continuance in the same state; lastingness.
Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain uncompact. Boyle.
Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanency or fixedness in being. Hale.
From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.
PERMANENT. adj. [from permanent, Fr. permanens, Lat.] Durable; not decaying; unchanged.
If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker. b. iii. f. 10.
That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly uncomprehensible, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.
Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From fins, as did my frailer innocence;
Their joy sincere, and with no more sorrow mixt,
Eternity stands permanent and fast. Dryden.
PERMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.] Durably; lastingly.
It does, like a compact or consistent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.
PERMANSON. n. f. [from permanens, Lat.] Continuance.
Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanson in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERMEABLE. adj. [from permeo, Lat.] Such as may be pass'd through.
The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.
TO PERMEATE. v. a. [from permeo, Lat.] To pass through.
This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyſs, pervading not only the fillures, but the very bodies of the thata, permeating the interstices of the sand or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward's Natural History.
PERMEANT. adj. [from permeans, Lat.] Passing through.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the meſeraicks. Brown.

The willing I go. Milton.
You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your perusal and approbation. Dryden.
PERMISSIVE. adj. [from permittere, Lat.]
1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.
We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invincible, except to God alone
By his permissive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.
2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.
If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive,

PER

it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon's Essays.
Thus I embolden'd spakes, and freedom us'd Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton's Par. Lost.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Par. Lost.
PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permissio.] By bare allowance, without hindrance.
As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it. Bacon's Holy War.
PERMISSION. n. f. [from permittere, Lat.] The act of mixing.
TO PERMIT. v. a. [from permittere, Fr.] To allow without command.

PERPENDICULAR. adj. [from perpendicularis, Fr. perpendicularis, Lat.]
1. Crossing any other line at right angles. Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.
If in a line oblique their atoms rove,
Or in a perpendicular they move;
If some advance not slower in their race,
And some more swift, how could they be entangl'd. Blackmore.
The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton's Opticks.
2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.
Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.
Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not reflored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.
PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicularis.]
1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.
2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.
Ten masts attach make not the altitude reach,
Which thou halt perpendicularly fall'n. Shakespeare.
Irons refrigerated North and South, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth, the arrow will return to your foot again. More.
All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.
PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicularis.] The state of being perpendicular.
The meeting of two lines is the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle. Watts's Logic.
PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpendo.] Consideration. Not in use.
Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [from perpetro, Lat. perpetrator, Fr.] 1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.
Heat of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;
But true and perpetrated in our days. Pate's Juvenal.
My tender infants or my careful fire,
These they returning will to death require,
Will perpetrate on them the first design,
And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.
The forest, which in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.
2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.
Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit;
For whatsoever we perpetrate,
We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.
PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrator.]
1. The act of committing a crime.
A desperate discontented assassinate would, after the perpetration, have honested a meer private revenge. Watson.
A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be infernally drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.
2. A bad action.
The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.
PERPETUAL. adj. [from perpetuus, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]
1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.
Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,
If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.
2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.
Within those banks rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton.
By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.
A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkin's Math. Magick.
PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetuus.] Constantly; continually; incessantly.
This verse is every where founding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.
In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another. Newton's Opticks.
The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Swift.
TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [from perpetuo, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]
1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternalize.
Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.
Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation, so necessary to mankind. Forbes.
2. To continue without cessation or intermission.
What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, 'till they awake from their lethargick sleep and arise from so mortiferous a flate, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.
PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuo.] The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.
Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPETUITY. n. f. [from perpetuus, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]
1. Duration to all futurity.
For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.
Yet am I better Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician, death. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Time as long again
Would be fill'd up with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.
2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.
A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends, and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.
3. Something of which there is no end.
A morsel of postage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The laws of God as well as of the land
Abhor a perpetuity should stand;
Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.
TO PERPLEX. v. a. [from perplexus, Latin.]
1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract; to embarrass; to puzzle.

Christian fortitude and patience had their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Sprat's Sermons.

PERSECUTOR. n. f. [persecutor, Fr. from persecute.] One who harasses others with continued malignity.
What man can do against them, not afraid,
Though to the death; against such cruelties
With inward consolations recompens'd;
And oft supported so, as shall amaze
Their proudest persecutors. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Henry rejected the pope's supremacy, but retained every corruption besides, and became a cruel persecutor. Swift.

PERSEVERANCE. n. f. [perseverantia, Lat.]
This word was once improperly accented on the second syllable. Perseverance in any design or attempt; steadiness in pursuits; constancy in progress. It is applied alike to good and ill.
The king becoming graces,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.
They hate repentance more than perseverance in a fault. King Charles.

PER

Wait the seasons of providence with patience and perseverance in the duties of our calling; what difficulties soever we may encounter.
Patience and perseverance overcome the greatest difficulties.
And perseverance with his batter'd shield.
PERSEVERANT. adj. [perseverant, Fr. perseverant, Lat.] Persevering; constant. Ansforth.

TO PERSEVERE. v. n. [persevere, Lat. perseverare, Fr.] This word was anciently accented less properly on the second syllable. To persist in an attempt; not to give over; not to quit the design.
But my rude musick, which was wont to please
Some dainty ears, cannot with any skill
The dreadful tempest of her wrath appease, Nor move the dolphin from her stubborn will;
But in her pride the doth persevere still.
Thrice happy, if they know
Their happiness, and persevere upright!
Thus beginning, thus we persevere;
Our passions yet continue what they were.
To persevere in any evil course, makes you unhappy in this life, and will certainly throw you into everlasting torments in the next. Wake's Preparation for Death.

PERSEVERINGLY. adv. [from persevere.] With perseverance.

TO PERSIST. v. n. [persiste, Lat. persistere, Fr.] To persevere; to continue firm; not to give over.
Nothing can make a man happy, but that which shall last as long as he lasts; for an immortal soul shall persist in being not only when profit, pleasure and honour, but when time itself shall cease. South's Sermons.
If they persist in pointing their batteries against particular persons, no laws of war forbid the making reprisals. Addison.

PERSISTENCY. n. f. [from persist.] Persistence seems more proper.
1. The state of persisting; steadiness; constancy; perseverance in good or bad.
The love of God better can confit with the indeliberate commissions of many sins, than with an allowed persistence in any one. Government of the Tongue.

2. Obstinacy; obduracy; contumacy.
Thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistence. Shakespeare.

9. Character.
From his first appearance upon the stage, in his new person of a scycophant or juggler, instead of his former person of a prince, prince, he was exposed to the derision of the courtiers and the common people, who looked about him, that one might know where the owl was, by the flight of birds. Bacon.
He hath put on the person not of a robber and a murderer, but of a traitor to the state. Hayward.

10. Character of office.
I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in the administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakespeare.
How different is the same man from himself, as he sustains the person of a magistrate and that of a friend. South.

11. [In grammar.] The quality of the noun that modifies the verb.
Dorus the more blushed at her smiling, and she the more smiled at his blushing; because he had, with the remembrance of that plight he was in, forgot in speaking of himself the third person. Sidney.
If speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural is with greater latitude. Locke.

PERSONABLE. adj. [from person.]
1. Handsome; graceful; of good appearance.
Were it true that her son Nimias had such a stature, as that Simiramis, who was very personable, could be taken for him; yet it is unlikely that she could have held the empire forty-two years after by any such subtilty. Raleigh.

2. [In law.] One that may maintain any plea in a judicial court. Ansforth.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [personage, Fr.]
1. A considerable person; man or woman of eminence.
It was a new sight fortune had prepared to those woods, to see these great personages thus run one after the other. Sidney.
It is not easy to research the actions of eminent personages, how much they have been blinded by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Watton.

2. Exterior appearance; air; stature.
She hath made compare
Between our features, she hath urg'd his height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
She hath prevail'd with him. Shakespeare.
The lord Sudley was fierce in courage, courtly in fashion, in personage stately, in voice magnificent, but somewhat empty of matter. Hayward.

3. Character assumed.
The great diversion is masking: the Venetians, naturally grave, love to give into the follies of such seasons, when disguised in a false personage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

4. Character represented.
Some persons must be found out, already known by history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this fable. Broom's View of Epic Poems.

PERSONAL. adj. [personal, Fr. personalis, Lat.]
1. Belonging to men or women, not to things; not real.
Every man so termed by way of personal difference only.
For my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him;
But for the general. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
It could not mean, that Cain as elder had a natural dominion over Abel, for the words are conditional; if thou doest well, and so personal to Cain. Locke.
Publick reproofs of sin are general, though by this they lose a great deal of their effect; but in private conversations the application may be more personal, and the proofs when so directed come home. Rogers.

2. Affecting individuals or particular people; peculiar; proper to him or her; relating to one's private actions or character.
The fav'nites that the absent king
In deputation left,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakespeare.

3. Present; not acting by representative.
This herock constancy determined him to desire in marriage a princess, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

4. Exterior; corporal.
This heroick constancy determined him to desire in marriage a princess, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. [In law.] Something moveable; something appendant to the person, as money; not real, as land.
But real and hereditary was. Dowles.

6. [In grammar.] A personal verb is that which has all the regular modification of the three persons; opposed to impersonal that has only the third.
The existence or individuality of any one.
Person belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery: this personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness, whereby it imputes to itself past actions, just upon the same ground that it does the present. Locke.

PER

PERSONALLY. adv. [from personal.]
1. In person; in presence; not by representative.
Approbation not only they give, who personally declare their assent by voice, sign or act, but also when others do it in their names. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

PERTINENCY. n. f. [from pertinencia, Lat.] Propriety to the purpose; appoitenees.
 I have shewn the fitness and pertinency of the apostle's discourse to the persons he addrested to, whereby it appeareth that he was no babbler, and did not talk at random. Bentley.
PERTINENT. adj. [from pertinens, Lat. pertinent, Fr.] 1. Related to the matter in hand; just to the purpose; not useless to the end propos'd; apposite; not foreign from the thing intended.
 My caution was more pertinent
 Than the rebuke you give it. Shakeff. Coriolanus.
 I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this business. Bacon.
 Here I shall seem a little to digress, but you will by and by find it pertinent. Bacon.
 If he could find pertinent treatises of it in books, that would reach all the particulars of a man's behaviour; his own ill-fashioned example would spoil all. Locke.
 2. Relating; regarding; concerning. In this sense the word now used is pertaining.
 Men shall have just cause, when any thing pertinent unto faith and religion is doubted of, the more willingly to incline their minds towards that which the sentence of so grave, wise and learned in that faculty shall judge most found. Hooker.
PERTINENTLY. adv. [from pertinent.] Appositely; to the purpose.

PER

Be modest and reserved in the presence of thy betters, speaking little, answering pertinently, not interposing without leave or reason. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
PERTINENTNESS. n. f. [from pertinent.] Appoitenees. Diæ.
PERTINGENT. adj. [from pertingens, Lat.] Reaching to; touching. Diæ.
PERTLY. adv. [from pert.] 1. Briskly; smartly.
 I find no other difference betwixt the common town-wits and the downright country fools, than that the first are pertly in the wrong, with a little more gaiety; and the last neither in the right nor the wrong. Pope.
 2. Saucily; petulantly.
 Yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
 Yond towers, whose wanton tops do burl the clouds,
 Must kiss their own feet. Shakeffear.
 When you pertly raise your snout,
 Fleer, and gibe, and laugh, and flout;
 This, among Hibernian allies,
 For sheer wit, and humour passes. Swift.
PERTNESS. n. f. [from pert.] 1. Brisk folly; sauciness; petulance.
 Dulness delighted ey'd the lively dunces,
 Remembering the herself was pertness once. Dunciad.
 2. Petty liveliness; spiriteliness without force, dignity or solidity.
 There is in Shaftsbury's works a lively pertness and a parade of literature; but it is hard that we should be bound to admire the reveries. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

 The accession or secession of bodies from the earth's surface perturb not the equilibrium of either hemisphere. Brown.
PERTURBATION. n. f. [from perturbatio, Lat. perturbation, Fr.] 1. Disquiet of mind; deprivation of tranquillity.
 Love was not in their looks, either to God,
 Nor to each other; but apparent guilt,
 And shame, and perturbation, and despair. Milton.
 The soul as it is more immediately and strongly affected by this part, so doth it manifest all its passions and perturbations by it. Ray on the Creation.
 2. Restlessness of passions.
 Natures, that have much heat, and great and violent desires and perturbations, are not ripe for action, till they have passed the meridian of their years. Bacon's Essays.
 3. Disturbance; disorder; confusion; commotion.
 Although the long diffentions of the two houses had had lucid intervals, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth into new perturbations and calamities. Bacon.
 4. Cause of disquiet.
 O polidid perturbation! golden care!
 That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
 To many a watchful night: sleep with it now,
 Yet not to found, and half so deeply sweet,
 As he, whose brow with homely bigger bound,
 Sleeps out the watch of night. Shakeff. Henry IV.
 5. Commotion of passions.
 Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers;
 And, without perturbation, hear me speak. Ben. Johnson.

TO PERVADE. v. a. [from pervadeo, Lat.] 1. To pass through an aperture; to permeate.
 The labour'd chyle pervades the pores
 In all the arterial perforated shores. Blackmore.
 Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi stone steeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varnished, and many other substances soaked in such liquors as will intimately pervade their little pores, become by that means more transparent than otherwise. Newton's Opticks.

PER

2. To pass through the whole extension.
Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it.
What but God?
Pervades, adjusts and agitates the whole.
PERVATION, n. f. [from pervade,] The act of pervading or passing through.
If fusion be made rather by the ingress and transcurfions of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted; both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to saltpetre, will appear to be caused by the pervasion of a foreign body.
PERVERSE, adj. [from pervert, Fr. pervertus, Lat.]
1. Distorted from the right.
And nature breeds
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things.
Then for the testimony of truth hath born Universal reproach; far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds
Judge'd thee perverse.
To so perverse a sex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again.
2. Petulant; vexatious.
Oh gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world.
PERVERSELY, adv. [from perverse,] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously; spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.
Men *perverse*ly take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate.
Men that do not *perverse*ly use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas.
A patriot is a dangerous post,
When wanted by his country most,
Perverse comes in evil times,
Where virtues are imputed crimes.
PERVEXNESS, n. f. [from perverse,]
1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful crossness.
A wholesome tongue is a tree of life; *perverse*ness therein is a breach in the spirit.
Virtue hath some *perverse*ness; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others ill.
He whom he wishes most, shall seldom gain
Through her *perverse*ness; but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse.
The *perverse*ness of my fate is such,
That he's not mine, because he's mine too much.
When a friend in kindness tries
To shew you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incense;
*Perverse*ness is your whole defence.
2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.
Neither can this be meant of evil governors or tyrants; for they are often established as lawful potentates; but of some *perverse*ness and defection in the very nation itself.
PERVERSION, n. f. [from perverse, Fr. from perverse,] The act of perverting; change to something worse.
Women to govern men, slaves freemen, are much in the same degree; all being total violations and perversions of the laws of nature and nations.
He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abby lands would be an effectual incitement to their perversion.
PERVERT, n. f. [from pervert, Fr. from pervert,] Pervertence; crossness.
What strange *pervert*ity is this of man!
When 'twas a crime to taste th' lightning tree,
He could not then his hand refrain.
To PERVERT, v. a. [from pervert, Lat. pervertir, Fr.]
1. To distort from the true end or purpose.
Instead of good they may work ill, and pervert justice to extreme injustice.
If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of justice in a province, marvel not.
If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil.
He has perverted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into blasphemy, of which they were not guilty.

PES

Porphyry has wrote a volume to explain this cave of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another person has perverted it into obscenity; and both allegorically.
2. To corrupt; to turn from the right; opposed to convert, which is to turn from the wrong to the right.
The heinous and despicable act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, and how He in the serpent had perverted Eve,
Her husband she, to taste the fatal fruit,
Was known in heav'n.
PERVERTER, n. f. [from pervert,] Milton's Paradise Lost.
1. One that changes any thing from good to bad; a corrupter.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, he cannot be so properly born, as damned into the world.
2. One who distorts any thing from the right purpose.
He that reads a prohibition in a divine law, had need be well satisfied about the sense he gives it, lest he incur the wrath of God, and be found a perverter of his law.
PERVERTIBLE, adj. [from pervert,] That may be easily perverted.
PERVICACIOUS, adj. [from pervicax, Lat.] Spitefully obstinate; peevishly contumacious.
May private devotions be efficacious upon the mind of one of the most pervicacious young creatures!

PERVICACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from pervicacious,] Spiteful obstinacy.
PERVICACITY, n. f. [from pervicacious,] Spiteful obstinacy.
PERVICIOUS, adj. [from pervicax, Lat.]
1. Admitting passage; capable of being permeated.
The Egyptians used to say, that unknown darkness is the first principle of the world; by darkness they mean God, whose secrets are pervious to no eye.
Leda's twins
Conspicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe,
Nor had they mis'd; but he to thickets fled,
Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the steel.
Those lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, decayed in tract of time, and rotted at length.
2. Pervading; permeating. This sense is not proper.
What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This flut'ring motion which we call the mind?
PERVIOUSNESS, n. f. [from pervious,] Quality of admitting a passage.
The perviousness of our receiver to a body much more subtle than air, proceeded partly from the looser texture of that glass the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glass.
There will be found another difference besides that of perviousness.
PERUKE, n. f. [from peruque, Fr.] A cap of false hair; a periwig.
I put him on a linen cap, and his peruke over that.

PERUKEMAKER, n. f. [from peruke and maker,] A maker of perukes; a wig-maker.
PERUSAL, [from peruse,] The act of reading.
As pieces of miniature must be allowed a closer inspection, so this treatise requires application in the perusal.
If upon a new perusal you think it is written in the very spirit of the ancients, it deserves your care, and is capable of being improved.
To PERUSE, v. a. [from peruse,] To read.
Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason.
The petitions being thus prepared, do you constantly set apart an hour in a day to peruse those petitions.
Carefully observe, whether he tastes the distinguishing perfections or the specific qualities of the author whom he peruses.
2. To observe; to examine.
I hear the enemy;
Out some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.
I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king.
Myself I then perus'd, and limb by limb Survey'd.
PERUSER, n. f. [from peruse,] A reader; examiner.
The difficulties and hesitations of every one will be according to the capacity of each peruser, and as his penetration into nature is greater or less.
PESADE, n. f.

Fond man,
See here thy picture'd life. Thomson's Winter.

TO PIDDLE. v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from picciolo, Italian; or petit, Fr. little; Mr. Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh bryta, to eat; perhaps it comes from peddle, for Skinner gives for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]
1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.
From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lady breeding. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. To trifle; to attend to small parts rather than to the main.
Ans.

PIDDLER. n. f. [from piddle.] One that eats squeamishly, and without appetite.

PIE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from birzan, to build, that is to build of paste; by Junius derived by contraction from pastry; if pasties, doubled together without walls, were the first pies, the derivation is easy from pie, a foot; as in some provinces, an apple pasty is still called an apple foot.]
1. Any crust baked with something in it.
No man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Mincing of meat in pies saveth the grinding of the teeth, and therefore more nourishing to them that have weak teeth. Bacon's Natural History.
He is the very Withers of the city; they have bought more editions of his works, than would serve to lay under all their pies at a lord mayor's Christmas. Dryden.
Chufe your materials right;
From thence of course the figure will arise,
And elegance adorn the surface of your pie. King.
Eat beef or pie-crust, if you'd ferocious be. King.

To such pigwidgon myrmidons as they? Cleveland.

PIE

PIKE. n. f. [pieque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The lucc or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: they are bred some by generation, and some not; as namely of a weed called pickerel-weed, unless Gensier be much mistaken; for he says, this weed and other glutinous matter, with the help of the sun's heat in some particular months, and in some ponds apted for it by nature, do become piques; doublets divers piques are bred after this manner, or are brought into some ponds some other ways, that is past man's finding out: Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer; and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the pawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not.

Walton's Angler.
In a pond into which were put several fish and two piques, upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the piques grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn.

Hale.
The pike the tyrant of the floods.
Pope.

2. [Pique, Fr.] A long lance used by the foot soldiers, to keep off the horse, to which bayonets have succeeded.

Beat you the drum that it speak mournfully, Trail your steel piques. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

- PIPKIN. n. f. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.
A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks.
Some officer might give consent
To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent. King.
- PIPPIN. n. f. [puppinghe, Dutch. Skinner.] A sharp apple.
Pippins take their name from the small spots or pips that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obdurateness; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pippin and the russet pippin, from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness:
they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice,
but slender bearers.
You shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting. Shakespeare.
At supper entertain yourself with a pippin roasted. Harvey.

1. Pricking; piercing; stimulating.
There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt. Addison on Italy.
2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.
Some think their wits asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness. Bacon's Essays.
Men make their ralleries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper. Government of the Tongue.
- PIQUANCY. n. f. [from piquant.] Sharpness; tartness.
- PIQUANTLY. adv. [from piquant.] Sharply; tartly.
A small mistake may leave upon the mind the lasting memory of having been piquantly, though wittily taunted. Locke.
- PIQUE. n. f. [piquer, French.]
1. An ill will; an offence taken; petty malevolence.
He had never any the least piquer, difference or jealousy with the king his father. Bacon's Henry VIII.

pirate.] The act or practice of robbing on the sea.
Our gallants, in their fresh gale of fortune, began to flum the seas with their piracies. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Now shall the ocean, as thy flames, be free,
From both those fates of storms and piracy. Waller.
Fame swifter than your winged navy flies,
Sounding your names, and telling dreadful news
To all that piracy and rapine use.
His presence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracy; though he practis'd the same trade. Arbutnot.
- PIRATE. n. f. [παιρατης; pirata, Lat. pirate, Fr.]
1. A sea-robber.
Wrangling pirates that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me. Shakespeare.
Pirates all nations are to prosecute, not so much in the right of their own fears, as upon the band of human societty. Bacon.
Relate, if business or the thirst of gain Engage your journey o'er the pathless main,
Where savage pirates seek through seas unknown
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
2. Any robber; particularly a bookfeller who seizes the copies of other men.
To PIRATE, v. n. [from the noun.] To rob by sea.
When they were a little got out of their former condition, among the satyrs, to shew that this poet was the inventor of piscatory eclogues. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

- PISCIVOROUS. adj. [piscis and voro.] Fishing; living on fish.
In birds that are not carnivorous, the meat is swallowed into the crop or into a kind of antestomach, observed in pisci- vorous birds, where it is moistened and mollified by some proper juice. Ray on the Creation.
- PISH. interj. A contemptuous exclamation. This is sometimes spoken and written phoo. I know not their etymology, and imagine them formed by chance.
There was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothach patiently;
However they have writ,
And made a pish at chance or sufferance. Shakespeare.
She frowned and cried pish, when I said a thing that I stole. Spektator, No 268.
- TO PISH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To express contempt.

1. To infect with pestilence.
2. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress; to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate;
to make uneasy; to disturb.
If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a wretch's woe,
Then all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shak.
Thus were they plagued
And worn with famine. Milton.
People are formed out of their reason, plagued into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.
When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

PLAGU'LY. adv. [from plaguing.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.

This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so pla- guily under the lash, I dare not interrupt him. Dryden.
You look'd scornful, and snift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.

PLAGU'Y. adj. [from plague.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.

PLAICE. n. f. [plate, Dutch.] A flat fish.
Of flat fish there are soles, flounders, dabs and plaice. Carew.

PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the highlanders in Scotland: there is a particular kind worn too by the women; but both these modes seem now nearly extirpated among them; the one by act of parliament; and the other by adopting the English dresses of the sex.

PLAIN. adj. [planus, Latin.]

1. Smooth; level; flat; free from protuberances or excrefcencies. In this sense, especially in philosophical writings, it is frequently written plane; as, a plane superficies.
It was his policy to leave no hold behind him; but to make all plain and waste. Spenser.
The South and South-East sides are rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst. Sandys's Journey.
Thy vineyard must employ thy sturdy steer
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain. Dryden.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chafe to travel through a plain one. Add.

2. Void of ornament; simple.
A crown of ruddy gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp, and rich without a show. Dryden.

3. Artless; not subtle; not specious; not learned; simple.
In choice of instruments, it is better to chuse men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report. Bacon's Essays.
Of many plain, yet pious christians, this cannot be affirmed. Hammoud's Fundamentals.
The experiments alledged with so much confidence, and told by an author that writ like a plain man, and one whose profession was to tell truth, helped me to resolve upon making the trial. Temple.
My heart was made to fit and pair within,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rowe.

We see the application of them is wanting. Addison.

PLAINNESS. n. f. [from plain.]

1. Levelness; flatness.
2. Want of ornament; want of show.
If some pride with want may be allowed,
We in our plainness may be justly proud,
Whate'er he's pleas'd to own, can need no show. Dryden.
As shades most sweetly recommend the lights
So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit. Pope.

3. Openness; rough sincerity.
Well, said Bassilius, I have not chosen Dametas for his fighting nor for his discouraging, but for his plainness and honesty, and therein I know he will not deceive me. Sidney.
Your plainness and your thorniness please me well. Shakespeare.
Think't thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power't to flattery bows; to plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Plainness and freedom, an epistolary stile required. Waller.

4. Artlessness; simplicity.
All laugh to find
Unthinking plainness so o'er spreads thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths. Dryden's Juvenal.

PLAIN'T. n. f. [plainte, French.]

1. Lamentation; complaint; lament.
Then pour out plaints, and in one word say this;
Helpless his plaints, who spoils himself of bliss. Sidney.

not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the planes, on which they move, stop their motion. Chyren.

2. [Plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.
The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To PLANE. v. a. [planer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To level; to smooth from inequalities.
The foundation of the Roman cauleway was made of rough stone, joined with a moist firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To smooth with a plane.
These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

PLANE-TREE. n. f. [plataneus, Lat. plane, platane, Fr.]
The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.
The beech, the swimming alder and the plane. Dryden.

PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανη, planet, Fr.]
Planets are the erratick or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another:
we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes:
we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four

1. To put in pawn.
Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away;
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond.

2. To give as warrant or security.
3. To secure by a pledge.
I accept her;
And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

4. To invite to drink, by accepting the cup or health after another.
The fellow, that Parts bread with him, and pledges
The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is th' readiest man to kill him.

To you noble lord of Westmoreland,
—I pledge your grace.
That hexameter orator began the king of Homebia's health; he presently pledg'd it.

PLEDGET. n. f. [plagget, Dutch.] A small mass of lint.
I applied a pledget of basilicon.

PLEIADS. n. f. [pleiades, Lat. πλειάδες, Gr.] A northern constellation.
The pleiades before him danc'd,
Shedding sweet influence.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For pleiades, hyads and the northern car.

PLENARILY. adv. [from plenary.] Fully; completely.
The cause is made a plenary cause, and ought to be determined plenarily.

PLENARY. adj. [from plenus, Lat.] Full; complete.
I am far from denying that compliance on my part, for plenary consent it was not, to his destruction.

The cause is made a plenary cause.
A treatise on a subject should be plenary or full, so that nothing may be wanting, nothing which is proper omitted.

PLENARY. n. f. Decisive procedure.
A bare institution without induction does not make a plenary against the king, where he has a title to present.

PLENARINESS. n. f. [from plenary.] Fulness; completeness.
PLENUNARY. adj. [from plenunarius, Lat.] Relating to the full moon.
If we add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenunary exemptions, there would arise above an hundred more.

PLE

PLENIPOTENCE. n. f. [from plenus and potentia, Lat.] Fulness of power.

PLENIPOTENT. adj. [from plenipotens, Lat.] Invested with full power.
My substitutes I send you, and create Plenipotents on earth, of matchless might Issuing from me.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. n. f. [from plenipotentiaire, Fr.] A negotiator invested with full power.
They were only the plenipotentiary monks of the patriarchal monks.

PLENIST. n. f. [from plenus, Lat.] One that holds all space to be full of matter.
Those spaces, which the vacuists would have empty, because devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter by any sensible effects.

PLENITUDE. n. f. [from plenus, Lat. plenitudo, Fr.]
1. Fulness; the contrary to vacuity.
If there were every where an absolute plenitude and density without any pores between the particles of bodies, all bodies of equal dimensions would contain an equal quantity of matter, and consequently be equally ponderous.

2. Repletion; animal fulness; plenthy.
Relaxation from plenitude is cured by spare diet.

3. Exuberance; abundance.
The plenitude of the pope's power of dispensing was the main question.

4. Completeness.
The plenitude of William's fame
Can no accumulated stores receive.

PLENTEOUS. adj. [from plenus.]
1. Copious; exuberant; abundant.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt
Now plenteous these acts of hateful strife.

Two plenteous fountains the whole prospect crown'd,
This through the gardens leads its streams around.

2. Fruitful; fertile.
Take up the fifth part of the land in the seven plentius years.
Lab'ring the soil and reaping plenteous crop.

PLENTEOUSLY. adv. [from plenteus.] Copiously; abundantly; exuberantly.
Thy due from me is tears,
Which nature, love and filial tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously.

God created the great whales and each Soul living, each that crept, which plenteously
The waters generated.

God proves us in this life, that he may the more plenteously reward us in the next.
PLENTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from plenteus.] Abundance; fertility.
The seven years of plenteousness in Egypt were ended.

PLENTIFUL. adj. [from plenus and ful.] Copious; abundant; exuberant; fruitful.
To Amalthea he gave a country, bending like a horn;
whence the tale of Amalthea's plentiful horn.

He that is plentiful in expenses, will hardly be preferred from decay.
If it be a long winter, it is commonly a more plentiful year.

When they had a plentiful harvest, the farmer had hardly any corn.
Alcibiades was a young man of noble birth, excellent education and a plentiful fortune.

PLENTIFULLY. adv. [from plentiful.] Copiously; abundantly.
They were not multiplied before, but they were at that time plentifully increased.

Born is plentifully furnished with water, there being a great multitude of fountains.
PLENTIFULNESS. n. f. [from plentiful.] The state of being plentiful; abundance; fertility.

PLENTY. n. f. [from plenus, full.]
1. Abundance; such a quantity as is more than enough.
Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenty and joyful birth.

What makes land, as well as other things, dear, is plenty of buyers, and but few sellers; and so plenty of sellers and few buyers makes land cheap.

2. Fruitfulness; exuberance.
The teeming clouds
Descend in gladness plenty o'er the world.

3. It is used, I think, barbarously for plentiful.
To graze with thy calves,
Where water is plenty.

4. A state in which enough is had and enjoyed.
Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the Lord.

PLI

PLEONASM. n. f. [pleonasmus, Fr. pleonasmus, Lat.] A figure of rhetoric, by which more words are used than are necessary.
PLESH. n. f. [A word used by Spenser instead of plash, for the convenience of rhyme.] A puddle; a boggy marsh.

Out of the wound the red blood flowed fresh,
That underneath his feet soon made a purple plesh.

PLETHORA. n. f. [from πλεθώρα, Gr.] The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state or health; arises either from a diminution of some natural evacuations, or from debauch and feeding higher or more in quantity than the ordinary powers of the viscera can digest: evacuations and exercise are its remedies.

The diseases of the fluids are a plethora, or too great abundance of laudable juices.
PLETHORETIC. adj. [from plethora.] Having a full habit.

PLETHORICK. adj. [from plethorick.] Having a full habit.
The fluids, as they consist of spirit, water, salts, oil and terrestrial parts, differ according to the redundancy of the whole or of any of these; and therefore the plethorick are phlegmatick, oily, saline, earthy or dry.

PLETHORY. n. f. [plethoria, Fr. from πλεθώρα, Gr.] Fulness of habit.
In too great repletion, the elastic force of the tube throws the fluid with too great a force, and subjects the animal to the diseases depending upon a plethory.

PLEVIN. n. f. [plevina, Fr. plevina, law Lat.] In law, a warrant or assurance. See REPLEVIN.
PLEURISY. n. f. [πleurisy, Fr. pleurisy, Lat.]

Pleurisy is an inflammation of the pleura, though it is hardly distinguishable from an inflammation of any other part of the breast, which are all from the same cause, a stagnated blood; and are to be remedied by evacuation, suppuration or expectoration, or all together.

PLEURITICAL. adj. [from pleurisy.]
PLEURITICK. adj. [from pleurisy.]
1. Diseased with a pleurisy.
The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuritical people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat.

2. Denoting a pleurisy.
His blood was pleuritical, it had neither colour nor consistence.

PLYABLE. adj. [from pliable, Fr. to bend.]
1. Easy to be bent; flexible.
Though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt, and make the very law so pliable and bendings, that it shall be impossible to be broke.

Whether the different motions of the animal spirits may have any effect on the mould of the face, when the lineaments are pliable and tender, I shall leave to the curious.
2. Flexible of disposition; easy to be persuaded.

PLYABLENESS. n. f. [from pliable.]
1. Flexibility; easiness to be bent.
2. Flexibility of mind.
Compare the ingenious pliancy to virtuous counsels in youth, as it comes fresh out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obstinacy in most sorts of sin, that is to be found in an aged sinner.

PLIANCY. n. f. [from pliant.] Easiness to be bent.
Had not exercise been necessary, nature would not have given such an activity to the limbs, and such a pliancy to every part, as produces those comparisons and extensions necessary for the preservation of such a system.

PLIANT. adj. [from pliant, French.]
1. Bending; tough; flexible; pliant; lithe; limber.
An anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether the fibres may not be made up of a finer and more pliant thread.

2. Easy to take a form.
Particles of heav'nly fire,
Or earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' ethereal energy.

As the wax melts that to the flame I hold,
Pliant and warm may fill her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again.

3. Easily complying.
In languages the tongue is more pliant to all sounds, the joints more supple to all feats of activity, in youth than afterwards.

Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practise ev'ry pliant gesture,
Opening their trunk for ev'ry teller.

4. Easily persuaded.
The will was then ductile and pliant to right reason, it met the dictates of a clarified understanding halfway.

PLIANTNESS. n. f. [from pliant.] Flexibility; toughness.
Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness.

PLIATURE. n. f. [pliatra, from plia, Lat.] Fold; double.
PLICATION. n. f. [pliation is used somewhere in Clarissa.]
PLIERS. n. f. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

PLO

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers.
To PLIGHT. v. a. [plichten, Dutch.]
1. To pledge; to give as surety.

He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land.

Met the night mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.
I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight.

New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break.
I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about us.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plia, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, plight or plait, a fold or flexure.]
Her head she fondly would agitate
With gaudie girlonds, or fresh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' th' plighted clouds.

PLIGHT. n. f. [This word skinner imagines to be derived from the Dutch, plicht, office or employment; but Tamias observes, that plite, Saxon, signifies distress or pressing danger; whence, I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]
1. Condition; state.
When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful sight Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are.

Befeech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood Praying.
Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loughsome plight.
Most perfect hero tried in heaviest plight
Of labours huge and hard.

2. Good case.
Who abuteth his cattle and flayes them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gain is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

4. [From plight.] A fold; a pucker; a double; a purtle; a plait.
Yclad, for feet of scorching air,
All in a fliken canvas, lilly white,
Purified upon with many a folded plight.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλινθία, Gr.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vitruvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plint, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plait.

TO PLOD. v. n. [plaghen, Dutch. skimmer.]
1. To toil; to moid; to drudge; to travel.
A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his back before him.

Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in goss,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss.

2. To travel laboriously.
Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter, pack, shag,
If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day.

Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I took my head?

That barefoot plod'd the cold ground upon,
With faintest vow my faults to have amended.

3. To study

PLO

3. To study closely and dully.
Universal plotting prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long-during action tires
The finewy vigour of the traveller. Shakefp.
He plots to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute. Hadibras, p. iii.
She reason'd without plotting long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong. Swift's Miscel.
PLO'DDER. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.
Study is like the heav'n's glorious fun,
That will not be deep search'd with faucy looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from other's books? Shakefp.
PLOT. n. f. [from plote, Saxon. See PLAT.]
1. A small extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest. Fairy Queen.
Plant ye with alders or willows a plot,
Where yeerely as needeth mo poles may be got. Tusser.
Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy. Shakefp.
Were there but this fingle plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind. Shakefp.
When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shakefp.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.
2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddesses inhabiteth this region, who is the fowl of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it to perfect a plot. Sidney.
3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.
4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.
I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him. Shakefp.
Early seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress. Dan.
5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved and embarrassed;
the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravell'd at last by some unexpected means.
If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be of a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.
Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Recommon.
Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not? Pope.
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.
6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.
Frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton.
7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.
Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The face of his negotiation. Denham.
TO PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.
The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me. Shakefp.'s Richard III.
The wicked plotter against the just. Psalms xxxvii. 12.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce Thee from obedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
The wolf that round th' inclosure prowld
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold. Dryden.
2. To contrive; to scheme.
The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis an-swer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain. Wotton.
TO PLOT. v. a.
1. To plan; to contrive.

PLO

- With shame and sorrow fill'd:
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.
2. To describe according to ichnography.
This treatise plotted down Cornwall, as it now standeth, for the particulars. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
PLOTTER. n. f. [from plot.]
1. Conspirator.
As for you, Colonel, we shall try who's the greater plotter of us two; I against the state, or you against the petticoat. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. Contriver.
An irreligious moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shakefp.
PLUCK. v. a. [plucier, Fr. pluvialis, Lat.] A lapwing. A bird.
Of wild birds, Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant and plucker. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Scarce
The bittern knows his time: or from the shore,
The plucker when to scatter o'er the heath
And sing. Thomson's Spring.
PLOUGH. n. f. [from plow, Saxon; plow, Danish; plough, Dutch.]
1. The instrument with which the furrows are cut in the ground to receive the seed.
Look how the purple flower, which the plough
Hath torn in sunder, languishing doth die. Peacocks.
Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams;
some in the share, others in the coulter and handles. Mor.
In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers. Thomson.
2. A kind of plane.
TO PLOUGH. v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.
Rebellion, insolenec, sedition
We ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? 11. xxviii. 24.
They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black. Mortimer.
TO PLOUGH. v. a.
1. To turn up with the plough.
Let the Volcians plough Rome and harrow Italy. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Shou'd any slave, so lowly, belong to you?
No doubt you'd lend the rogue, in fetters bound,
To work in bridewell, or to plough your ground. Dryden.
A man may plough in stiff grounds the first time followed, an acre a day. Mortimer.
You find it plough'd into ridges and furrows.
2. To bring to view by the plough.
Another of a dusky colour, near black; there are of these frequently plough'd up in the fields of Weldon. Woodward.
3. To furrow; to divide.
When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
He plough'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd. Adelphi.
With speed we plough the watery way,
My power shall guard thee. Pope's Odyssey.
4. To tear; to furrow.
Let
Patient Octavia plough thy vilage up
With her prepared nails. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
PLOUGHBOY. n. f. [plough and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.
A ploughboy, that has never seen any thing, but thatched houses and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watt's Logic.
PLOUGHER. n. f. [from plough.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.
When the country shall be replenish'd with corn, as it will, if well followed; for the country people themselves are great ploughers and small spenders of corn: then there should be good store of magazines erected. Spenser.
PLOUGHLAND. n. f. [plough and land.] A farm for corn.
Who hath a ploughland casts all his feed-corn there.
And yet allows his ground more corn should bear.
In this book are entered the names of the manors or inhabited townships, the number of ploughlands that each contains, and the number of the inhabitants. Dana.
PLOUGHMAN. n. f. [plough and man.]
1. One that attends or uses the plough.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks, Shakefp.
The cuckoo then on every tree, God provides the good things of the world, to serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploughman. Taylor.
The careful ploughman doubting stands.
Your reign no less assures the ploughman's peace, Waller.
Than the warm sun advances his increase.
The merchant gains by peace, and the soldiers by war, the shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughmen by dry. Temple.
Who

PLU

- Who can cease t' admire
The ploughman conful in his coarse attire. Dryden.
One
My ploughman's is, t'other my shepherd's son. Dryden.
2. A gross ignorant ruffick.
Her hand! to whose soft seizure
The cignet's down is harsh, and, spite of sense, Hard as the palm of ploughman. Shakefp.
3. A strong laborious man.
A weak stomach will turn rye bread into vinegar, and a ploughman will digest it. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PLOUGHMONDAY. n. f. The monday after twelfth-day.
Ploughmonday next after that the twelfth is past,
Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last. Tusser.
PLOUGHSHARE. n. f. [plough and share.] The part of the plough that is perpendicular to the coulter.
As the earth was turned up, and so found some pretty things. Sidney, b. ii.
The pretty innocent walks blindfold among burning plough- shares without being scorched. Addison's Spectator.
TO PLUCK. v. a. [pluccian, Sax. plucken, Dutch.]
1. To pull with nimbleness or force; to snatch; to pull; to draw; to force on or off; to force up or down; to act upon with violence. It is very generally and licentiously used, particularly by Shakefp.
It seem'd better unto that noble king to plant a peaceable government among them, than by violent means to pluck them under. Spenser on Ireland.
You were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off. Shakefp.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakefp.
Can't thou not
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the fluff'd' before. Shakefp.'s Macbeth.
When yet he was but tender bodied, when youth with comelines plucked all gaze his way. Shakefp. Macbeth.
I gave my love a ring;
He would not pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

3. To pluck up a heart or spirit. A proverbial expression for taking up or refusing of courage.
He willed them to pluck up their hearts, and make all things ready for a new assault, wherein he expected they should with courageous resolution recompense their late cowardice.
Kneller's History of the Turks.
PLUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pull; a draw; a single act of plucking.
Birds kept coming and going all the day long; but so few at a time, that the man did not think them worth a pluck.
L'Estrange.
Were the ends of the bones dry, they could not, without great difficulty, obey the plucks and attractions of the motory muscles. Ray on the Creation.
2. [Pluck, Erse. I know not whether derived from the English, rather than the English from the Erse.] The heart, liver and lights of an animal.
PLUCKER. n. f. [from pluck.] One that plucks.
Thou fatter up and pluck down of kings! Shakefp.
Pull it as soon as you see the seed begin to grow brown, at which time let the pluckers tie it up in handfuls. Mortimer.

with a large plug of tobacco. Swift's Direct. to the Butler.

PLU

- TO PLUG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop with a plug.
A tent plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it. Sharp's Surgery.
PLUM. n. f. [plum, plumeceop, Sax. blumme, Danish. A custom has prevailed of writing plumb, but improperly.]
1. A fruit.
The flower consists of five leaves, which are placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oval or globular fruit, having a soft fleshy pulp, surrounding an hard oblong stone, for the most part pointed; to which should be added, the footstalks are long and slender, and have POET. n. f. [poete, Fr. poeta, Lat. poetis.] An inventor; an author of fiction; a writer of poems; one who writes in measure.

The poet's eye in a fine frenzy rowling,
Doth glance from heav'n to earth, from earth to heav'n;
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape, and gives to ev'ry thing
A local habitation and a name. Shaksp.
Our poet ape, who would be thought the chief,
His works become the frippery of wit,
From brocade he is grown to bold a thief,
While we the robb'd despise, and pity it. B. Johnson.
Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets taught by the heav'nly muse
Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles. Milton.
A poet is a maker, as the word signifies; and he who cannot make, that is invent, hath his name for nothing. Dryden.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.
Admire we then,
Or popularity, or flattery, or flattery,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings. Pope.
He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.
2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.
The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Eaton.
- POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]
1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.
The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.
2. According to vulgar conception.
Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularity let forth the eminence thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- To POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.
When there are great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.
- POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.
The population of a kingdom, especially if it be not mown down by wars, does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned, only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower, and gather more. Bacon.
- POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populus.] Populousness; multitude of people.
How it conducteth unto popuosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are two main causes of numerosity in any species; a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Brown.

POR

- POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.
A wilderness is populous enough.
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakep.

- PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from four cent années; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain was matured under ground one hundred years.]
1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semi-pellucid.
We have burials in several countries, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.
We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble molds. Dryden.
2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]
1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.
Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Benj. Johnson.
2. A portico; a covered walk.
All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakep.
- PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi or epic, Fr. porcupine, Italian.]
The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: the quills, with which its whole body is covered, are black on the shoulders, thighs, sides and belly; on the back, hips and loins they are variegated with white and pale brown; the neck is short and thick, the nose blunt, the nostrils very large in form of flits; the upper lip is slit or cleft as in the hare, and it has whiskers like a cat: the eyes are small, and the ears very like those of the human species: the legs are short, and on the hinder feet are five toes, but only four upon the fore-feet, and its tail is four or five inches long, beset with spines in an annular series round it: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.
This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.
Long bearded comets tick
Like flaming porcupines to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.
By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Ar. and Po.
- PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. πῶρ.]
1. Sprinkle of the skin; passage of perspiration.
Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bac.
Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore. Milton.
2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.
Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.
- To PORE. v. n. [pore is the optic nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenceness and care; to examine with great attention.
All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakespeare.

POR

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.
The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Roscoe.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.
He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.
The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.
PORBLIND. adj. [commonly spoken and written portblind.]
Nearighted; shortighted.
Porblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not porblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are porblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon's Natural History.
PORINESS. n. f. [from por.] Fullness of pores.
I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wifem.
PORISTICK method. n. f. [ποριστικός.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways a problem may be solved. Diät.
PORK. n. f. [porc, Fr. porcus, Lat.] Swines flesh unsalted.
You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to christians, you raise the price of pork.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Floyer on the Humours.
PORKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.
Strait to the lodgments of his head he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the fun. Pope.
PORK-EATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.
This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
PORRET. [from pork.] A young hog.
A priest appears
And off' rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porret, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.
PORRLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.
A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porrlings, thou meanest to fat. Tupper.
POROSITY. n. f. [from poros.] Quality of having pores.
This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser.
POROUS. adj. [porous, Fr. from por.] Having small spiracles or passages.
The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rise a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light; firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.
POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores.
They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.
PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρεα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, Porphyry.] n. f. [Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.
I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peachment on Drawing.
Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.
PORPOISE. n. f. [porc peisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
PORRUS. n. f. [porc peisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatic together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.
Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a drop like a porpus. Swift.
PORRACIOUS. adj. [porracius, Lat. porrace, Fr.] Greenish.
If the lesser inclines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wifeman's Surgery.
PORRET. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.
It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, moly

POR

and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PORRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Shakespeare.
PORRIDGE-POT. n. f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.
PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.]
1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.
A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who daws 'em quite up with ointment, and, while the was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estrange.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headress; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakespeare.
A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Latin.] The act of reaching forth.
PORT. n. f. [port, Fr. portus, Latin.]
1. A harbour; a safe inlet for ships.
Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair sailing on the shore,
Disburden'd her. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I should be fill
Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakespeare.
The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when Shakespeare was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon, b. viii.
A weather beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.
2. [Porta, Lat. portæ, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.
Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Sion. Psalms ix. 14. Shakespeare.
Descend, and open your uncharged ports.
He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath entered. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep't the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snarcs out the watch of night. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other devoted and overgrown with griefs, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.
3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.
At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Raleigh.
The linlocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vigorous seaman every port hole plies.
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.
4. [Portie, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing;
external appearance; demeanour.
In that proud port, which her so goodly graces,
Whiles her fair face the rears up to the sky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperance ye may descry. Spenser.
Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman?
See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Paisley.
Their port was more than human, as they flood;
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.
A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Collier on Pride.
Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.
Thy plumed crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Philips.
To PORT.

POR

To PORT. v. a. [porto, Lat. porter, Fr.] To carry in form.
Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalxes, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Lat.]
1. Manageable by the hand.
2. Such as may be born along with one.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.
3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.
Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.
4. Sufferable; supportable.
How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
All these are portable
With other graces weigh'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.
PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, Fr.]
1. The price of carriage.
2. [From port.] Portolage.
Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
PORTAL. n. f. [portal, Fr. po. tella, Italian.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.
King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented fun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
Though I should run
To those disclosing ports of the fun;
And walk his way, until his horses steep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.
He through heav'n
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led To God's eternal house direct the way. Milton.
The sick for air before the portal gap.
The portal confits of a composite order unknown to the ancients. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PORTANCE. n. f. [from porter, Fr.] Air; mien; port; demeanour.
There stepped forth a goodly lady,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance born of heavenly birth. F. Qu.
Your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.
PORTASS. n. f. [sometimes called portais, and by Chaucer port-basse.] A breviary; a prayer book.
In his hand his portasse still he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Fairy Queen.
An old priest always read in his portais mumpimus domine for mumpimus; whereof when he was admonished, he said that he now had used mumpimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpimus for their new mumpimus. Camden.
PORTCULLIS. n. f. [portcullis, Fr. quasi porta clausa.] A portcullis, a sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.
Over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong,
Neither unevenly short, nor yet exceeding long. F. Qu.
The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.
She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Sygian pow'rs Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.
Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls. Danham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. More.
The gates are opened, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.
To PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To bar; to shut up.
Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakespeare.
PORTED. adj. [porter, Fr.] Borne in a certain or regular order.
They hem him round with ported spears. Milton.
To PORTEND. v. a. [portendo, Lat.] To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.

POR

As many as remained, he earnestly exhorteth to prevent portended calamities. Hobbes.
Doth this churlish supercription
Portend some alteration in good will? Shakespeare.
A moist and a cool summer portendeth a hard winter. Bacon.
True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past. Milton.
True posts are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate. Recommon.
The ruin of the state in the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also inferred from it as its cause. South's Sermon.
PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretoking.
Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Brown.
PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Lat.] Omen of ill; prodigy foretoking misery.
O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
My loss by dire portents the god foretold;
Yon riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentus, Lat. from portent.] Monstrous; prodigious; foretoking ill.
They are portentous things
Unto the climate, that they point at. Shakespeare.
This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch to like the king
That was. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous size
In the Hercinian forest lies. Recommon.
Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.
Every unwanted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanvil.
The petticoat will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means oblige several who are terrified or astonished at this portentous novelty. Addison's Spectator, N^o 127.
PORTER. n. f. [portier, Fr. from porta, Lat. a gate.]
1. One that has the charge of the gate.
Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me. Shakespeare.
Arm all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Ben Jonson.
Nec Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arb.
2. One who waits at the door to receive messengers.
A favourite porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.
3. [Porteus, Fr. from porta, Lat. to carry.] One who carries burthens for hire.
It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Hovell.
By porter, who can tell, whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate? Watts.
PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.
PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASS.
PORTGLAVE. n. f. [porter and glave, Fr. and Erse.] A sword bearer. Ainsworth.
PORTGRAVE. n. f. [porta, Lat. and grave, Teut. a keeper.]
PORTGREVE. n. f. The keeper of a gate. Obsolete.
PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portica, Italian; portique, Fr.]
A covered walk; a piazza.
The rich their wealth bestow
On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in state,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryden.
PORTION. n. f. [portio, Fr. portio, Latin.]
1. A part.
These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job xxvi. 14.
Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.
In battles won, fortune a part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the fame. Waller.
Those great portions or fragments fell into the abyss; some in one posture, and some in another. Burnet.
Pithous no small portion of the war
Prest'd on, and shook his lance. Dryden.
2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.
Here their pris'n ordain'd and portion set. Milton.
Shou'd you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall? Waller.
O

POR

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.

When he considers the manifold temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune. Leave to thy children tumult, strife and war,

Portions of toil, and legacies of care.

4. A wife's fortune. To PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide; to parcel. The gods who portion out

The lots of princes as of private men,

Have put a bar between his hopes and empire.

Argos the feat of sovereign rule I chose,

Where my Ulysses and his race might reign,

And portion to his tribes the wide domain.

2. To endow with a fortune. Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,

The young who labour, and the old who rest.

PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLINESS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour.

Such pride is praise, such portliness is honour,

That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;

And her fair countenance like a goodly banner

Spreads in defiance of all enemies.

When subtilties combineth with delightfulness, ful-ness with fineness, heaviness with portliness, and curtness with flayedness, how can the language found other than most full of sweetness?

PORTLY. adj. [from port.] 1. Grand of mien.

Rudely thou wrong'st my dear heart's desire,

In finding fault with her too portly pride.

Your Argosies with portly fail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Or as it were the pageants of the sea,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

A portly prince, and goodly to the fight,

He seem'd a son of Anak for his height.

2. Bulky; swelling. A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look,

A pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage.

Our house little deserves

The fource of greatness to be used on it;

And that same greatness too, which our own hands

Have help'd to make so portly.

PORTMAN. n. f. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports.

PORTMANTEAU. n. f. [from portemanteau, Fr.] A chest or bag in which cloaths are carried. I desired him to carry one of my portmanteaus; but he laughed, and bid another do it.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a por- toise, when the rides with her yards struck down to the deck.

PORTRAIT. n. f. [from portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life. As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful, and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael.

To PORTRAIT. v. a. [from portrait, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs.

I portrait in Arthur before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues.

PORTRAITURE. n. f. [from portraiture, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance. By the image of my cause I see

The portraiture of his.

Let some strange mysterious dream,

Wave at his wings in airy stream

Of lively portraiture display'd,

Softly on my eye-lids laid.

Herein was also the portraiture of a hart.

POS

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Her wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessors endure.

He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. To PORTRAY. v. a. [from portraiture, Fr.]

1. To paint; to describe by picture. The Earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple.

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Es.

Our Phenix queen was portrayed too bright,

Beauty alone could beauty take to right.

2. To adorn with pictures. Shields

Various, with boastful argument portray'd.

PORTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

PORTRIX. The portress of hell-gate reply'd.

The shoes put on, our faithful portress

Admits us in to storm the fortrefs;

While like a cat with walnuts sho'd,

Stumbling at every step the trod.

POWIGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a powigle or tadpole.

POXY. adj. [from porus, Fr. from por.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd th' admiring son

Beholds the vaulted roofs of posy stone.

To POSE. v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction. pose, Skinner.] 1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.

Learning was pos'd, philosophy was set,

Sophisters taken in a fisher's net

How God's eternal son should be man's brother.

Poseth his proudlest intellectual power.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give the following instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children.

2. To appose; to interrogate. She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no.

POSER. n. f. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner. He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser.

POSITED. adj. [from positus, Lat.] It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb. Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false.

POSITION. n. f. [from positio, Fr. positio, Latin.]

1. State of being placed; situation. Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of iniquitude till it attain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams.

Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same thing, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him.

By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum

as it did upon my eye.

We have a different prospect of the same thing, according to the different position of our understandings toward it.

Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies.

2. Principle laid down. Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what conscience can ye accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives.

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the position of that follow, but always on those which go before.

3. Advancement of any principle. A fallacious ilation is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remo-tion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent.

4. [In

POS

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pimpous; or a double consonant, as fole.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position.

The leaves of cataputa or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by-purge or vomit;

as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations.

POSITIVE. adj. [from positivus, Lat. positivus, Fr.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than im-penetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself.

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and do not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied. As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son; though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title.

3. Dogmatically; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion. I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season.

Some positive peritising fops we know,

That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;

But you, with pleasure own your errors past,

And make each day a critic on the last.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment. In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so.

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made.

Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see,

Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

5. Having the power to enact any law. Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative.

6. Certain; assured. POSITIVELY. adv. [from positive.]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position. Give me some breath, some little pause,

Before I positively speak in this.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

2. Not negatively. It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past.

3. Certainly; without dubitation. It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms. I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men.

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.]

1. Actuality; not mere negation. The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habi-tude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the pos- itiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence. This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterial-ness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a posi-

tiveness in relating matters of fact; in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith.

POSITIVITY. n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word. Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too.

POSITION. n. f. [from positura, Lat.] The manner in which any thing is placed. Supposing the position of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary.

POSNET. n. f. [from posnet, Fr. Skinner.] A little basin;

a porringer; a skillet. To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no foibles more

POS

POSSESSIVE, adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.
POSSESSORY, adj. [possessivus, Fr. from posséder.] Having possession.
 This he detains from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof. Howel.
POSSESSOR, n. f. [possessor, Lat. possessor, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell
 Receive thy new possessor. Milton.
 A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possessor of them. Stillington.
 'Twas the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury's Sermon.
POSSET, n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Shak.
 In came the bridesmaids with the posset,
 The bridegroom eat in spite. Suckling.
 I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale and pearl julep. Wise man's Surgery.

A sparing diet did her health assure;
 Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure. Dryden.
 The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which althea roots are boiled. Player on the Humours.
 Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink. Arbutnot.

POSSIBLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids. Not used.
 Swift as quicksilver it courses through
 The natural gates and alleys of the body;
 And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
 And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
 The thin and wholesome blood. Shaksp. Hamlet.
POSSIBILITY, n. f. [possibilitas, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to require, the stile of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hecker.

Brother, speak with possibilities,
 And do not break into these woeful extremes. Shaksp.
 Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South's Sermons.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.
 According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers's Sermons.
POSSIBLE, adj. [possibilis, Fr. possibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whiggle.

With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Mat. xix. 26.
 All things are possible to him that believeth. Mar. ix. 23.
 Firm we submit, but possible to swerve. Milton.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
 Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law. Locke.

POSSIBLY, adv. [from possible.]
 1. By any power really existing.

Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Can we possibly his love desert?
 2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon, b. viii.
 Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscrib'd by laws. Addison.

POST, n. f. [posse, Fr. equi possit currere.]
 1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.

In certain places there be always fresh posts, to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other. Abbot.
 Thee I'll rake up, the post unattended
 Of murtherous lechers. Shaksp. King Lear.

I fear my Julia would not deny my lines,
 Receiving them by such a worthless post. Shaksp.
 A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way. Ben. Johnson's Discern.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulness, which I should not care to hazard by the common post. Pope.

POS

2. Quick course or manner of travelling. This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; courir en poste; whence Shakespeare, to ride in post.
 I brought my master news of Juliet's death,
 And then in post he came from Mantua
 To this same monument. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Sent from Media post to Egypt. Milton.
 He who rides post through an unknown country, cannot distinguish the situation of places. Dryden.

3. [Poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; seat.
 The waters rise every where upon the surface of the earth, which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. Military station.
 See before the gate what flanking ghost
 Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post. Dryden.
 As I watch'd the gates,
 Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd
 From Cæsar's camp. Addison's Cato.

Whatever spirit careles of his charge
 His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
 Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope.
 Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope.

5. Place; employment; office.
 Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so. L'Estrange.
 False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution. L'Estrange.

Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, is no more fit to command than a tempest. Collier.
 While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
 And from Britannia's public posts retire,
 Me into foreign realms my fate conveys. Addison.

Certain laws, by just 'ers thought unjust,
 Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope.
 Many thousands there are, who determine the justice or madness of national administrations, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

6. [Postis, Lat.] A piece of timber let erect.
 The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper post of the house. Ex. xii. 7.

Fir-trees, cyresses and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fittest for posts or pillars. Wotton's Architecture.
Post is equivocal; it is a piece of timber, or a twist messenger. Watts's Logic.

POSTER, v. n. [posterus, Fr. from the noun.] To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shaksp.
 Will you presently take horse with him,
 And with all speed post with him towards the North? Shak.
Post speedily to my lord, your husband,
 Shew him this letter. Shaksp. King Lear.

Most wicked speed, to post
 With such dexterity to incestuous sheets. Shaksp.
 Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;
Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.
 The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Knusler.
 Themistocles made Xerxes post apace out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships athwart the Hellespont. Bacon's Essays.

Wer't thou of the golden-winged host,
 Who having clad thyself in human weed,
 To earth from thy prefixed seat did'st post. Milton.
 Thousands at his bidding speed,
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.
 With songs and dance we celebrate the day;
 At other times we reign by night alone,
 And posting through the skies pursue the moon. Dryden.
 No wonder that pastors are fallen into disesteem; I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis.

This only object of my real care,
 In some few posting fatal hours is hurt'd
 From wealth, from power, from love and from the world. Prior.

TO POST, v. a.
 1. To fix opprobriously on posts.
 Many gentlemen, for their integrity in their votes, were, by posting their names, exposed to the popular calumny and injury. King Charles's.

On pain of being posted to your sorrow,
 Fail not, at four, to meet me. 2. To place;

POS

2. [Poser, Fr.] To place; to station; to fix.
 The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
 Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.
 He that proceeds upon other principles in his enquiry into any sciences, puts himself on that side, and posts himself in a party, which he will not quit till he be beaten out. Locke.
 When a man is posted in the station of a minister, he is sure, beside the natural fatigue of it, to incur the envy of some, and the displeasure of others. Addison's Freeholder.

3. To register methodically; to transcribe from one book into another. A term common among merchants.
 You have not posted your books these ten years; how should a man of business keep his affairs even at this rate? Arbutnot.

4. To delay. Obsolete.
 I have not stop mine ears to their demands,
 Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
 Then why should they love Edward more than me. Shaksp. Henry VI.

POSTAGE, n. f. [from post.] Money paid for conveyance of a letter.
 Fifty pounds for the postage of a letter! to send by the church, is the dearest road in Christendom. Dryden.

 E're dawning light
 Discover'd had the world to heaven wide,
 He by a privy postern took his flight,
 That of no envious eyes he mote be spy'd. Fa. Queen.
 Go on, good Eglamour,
 Out at the postern by the abbey wall. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 By broken byways did I inward pass,
 And in that window made a postern wide. Fairfax.
 These issued into the base court through a privy postern, and sharply visited the assailants with halberds. Hayward.

POS

Great Britain hath had by his majesty a strong addition; the postern, by which we were so often entered and surpris'd, is now made up. Raleigh's Essays.
 The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
 Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.

If the nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to the audience in the brain, be so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no postern to be admitted by, no other ways to bring themselves into view. Locke.
 A private postern opens to my gardens.

Through which the beauteous captive might remove. Rowe.
POSTEXISTENCE, n. f. [post and existence.] Future existence.
 As Simonides has exposed the vicious part of women from the doctrine of pre-existence, some of the ancient philosophers have satyrized the vicious part of the human species from a notion of the foul's postexistence. Addison's Spect.

POSTHACKNEY, n. f. [post and hackney.] Hired posthorses.
 Epping the French ambassador with the king's coach attending him, made them balk the beaten road and teach posthackneys to leap hedges. Watson.
POSTHASTE, n. f. [post and haste.] Haste like that of a courier.

This is
 The source of this our warch, and the chief head
 Of this posthaste and romage in the land. Shaksp.
 The duke
 Requires your haste, posthaste appearance, Ev'n on the instant. Shaksp. Othello.
 This man tells us, that the world waxes old, though not in posthaste. Hakewill on Providence.

POSTHOUSE, n. f. [post and house.] Post office; house where letters are taken and dispatched.
 An officer at the posthouse in London places every letter he takes in, in the box belonging to the proper road. Watts.
POSTHUMOUS, adj. [posthumus, Lat. posthume, Fr.] Done, had, or published after one's death.

In our present miserable and divided condition, how just soever a man's pretensions may be to a great or blameless reputation, he must, with regard to his posthumous character, content himself with such a consideration as induced the famous Sir Francis Bacon, after having bequeathed his soul to God, and his body to the earth, to leave his fame to foreign nations. Addison's Freeholder, N° 35.

POSTICK, adj. [posticus, Lat.] Backward.
 The postick and backward position of the feminine parts in quadrupeds can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
POSTILL, n. f. [postille, Fr. postilla, Lat.] Gloss; marginal notes.

To Postill, v. a. [from the noun.] To gloss; to illustrate with marginal notes.
 I have seen a book of account of Empson's, that had the king's hand almost to every leaf by way of signing, and was in some places postilled in the margin with the king's hand. Bacon's Henry VII.

POSTILLER, n. f. [from postill.] One who glosses or illustrates with marginal notes.
 It hath been observed by many holy writers, commonly delivered by postillers and commentators. Brown.
 Hence you phantastick postillers in song,
 My text defeats your art, ties nature's tongue. Cleveland.

POSTILION, n. f. [postillon, French].
 1. One who guides the first pair of a set of six horses in a coach.
 A young bachelor of arts came to town recommended to a chaplain's place; but none being vacant, modestly accepted of that of a postillon. Tatler, N° 52.

2. One who guides a post chaise.
POSTLIMINIOUS, adj. [postliminium, Lat.] Done or contrived subsequently.

The reason why men are so short and weak in governing, is, because most things fall out to them accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their pre-conceiv'd ends, but are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes. South's Sermons.

POSTMASTER, n. f. [post and master.] One who has charge of public conveyance of letters.
 I came yonder at Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and 'tis a postmaster's boy. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Without this letter, as he believes that happy revolution had never been effected, he prays to be made postmaster general. Spectator, N° 629.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

POSTULATORY. adj. [from postulate.]
 1. Assuming without proof.

2. Assumed without proof.

Whoever shall peruse the phytonomy of Porta, and strictly observe how vegetable realities are forced into animal representations, may perceive the semblance is but postulatory.
Brown.

POSTURE. n. f. [postura, Fr. postura, Latin.]

1. Place; situation.

Although these studies are not so pleasing as contemplations physical or mathematical, yet they recompense with the excellency of their use in relation to man, and his noblest posture and station in this world, a state of regulated society.
Hale.

According to the posture of our affairs in the last campaign, this prince could have turned the balance on either side.
Addison.

2. Voluntary collocation of the parts of the body with respect to each other.

He starts,
 Then lays his finger on his temple; strait
 Springs out into fast gait; then stops again,
 Strikes his breast hard, and then anon he casts
 His eyes against the moon, in most strange postures.
Shak.

Where there are affections of reverence, there will be postures of reverence.
South's Sermons.

The posture of a poetick figure is the description of his heroes in the performance of such or such an action.

Spectator, N^o 305.

POT. n. f. [contracted from potest.]
 1. A motto on a ring.

A paltry ring,
 That he did give me, whole pot was,
 Like cutler's poetry;
 Love me and leave me not.
Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

You have chosen a very short text to enlarge upon; I should as soon expect to see a criticism on the pot of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal.
Addison.

2. A bunch of flowers. Of unknown derivation.

With store of vermeil roses,
 To deck their bridegroom's potest.
 We make a difference between suffering thistles to grow among us, and wearing them for potest.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

God is an eternal substance and act, without potentiality and matter, the principle of motion, the cause of nature. Still.

The true notion of a soul's eternity is this, that the future moments of its duration can never be all past and present; but still there will be a futurity and potentiality of more for ever and ever.
Bentley's Sermons.

POTENTIALLY. adv. [from potential.]

1. In power or possibility; not in act or positively.

This duration of human souls is only potentially infinite; for their eternity consists only in an endless capacity of continuance without ever ceasing to be in a boundless futurity, that can never be exhausted, or all of it be past or present; but their duration can never be positively and actually eternal, because it is most manifest, that no moment can ever be assigned, wherein it shall be true, that such a soul hath then actually sustained an infinite duration.
Bentley.

2. In efficacy; not in actuality.

They should tell us, whether only that be taken out of scripture which is actually and particularly there set down, or else that also which the general principles and rules of scripture potentially contain.

POWER. n. f. [potens, Fr.]
1. Command; authority; dominion; influence.
If law, authority and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Anthonio. Shakespeare.
No man could ever have a just power over the life of another, by right of property in land. Locke.
Power is no blessing in itself, but when it is employ'd to protect the innocent. Swift.
2. Influence; prevalence upon.
This man had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. Bacon's Essays.
Dejected! no, it never shall be said,
That fate had power upon a Spartan soul;
My mind on its own centre stands unmov'd
And stable, as the fabric of the world. Dryden.
3. Ability; force; reach.
That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.
I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r,
For your relief in my refreshing bow'r. Dryden.
You are still living to enjoy the blessings of all the good you have performed, and many prayers that your power of doing generous actions may be as extended as your will. Dry.
It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.
'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison's Guardian.
Though it be not in our power to make affliction no afflic-tion; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Atterbury's Sermons.

POW

4. Strength; motive force.
Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies, which were at rest; the effects also that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.
5. The moving force of an engine.
By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a fitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that force, which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.
6. Animal strength; natural strength.
Care, not fear; or fear not for themselves altered something the countenances of the two lovers: but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than dimayedness of courage. Sidney, b. i.
He died of great years, but of strong health and powers. Bacon's Henry VII.
7. Faculty of the mind.
If ever
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then you shall know the wounds invisible,
That love's keen arrows make. Shakespeare.
I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers drove the grossness of the popery into a received belief. Shakespeare.
In our little world, this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning powers of the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning powers from their unhappy slavery and darkness. Watts.
8. Government; right of governing.
My labour
Honest and lawful, to deserve my food
Of those who have me in their civil power. Milton.
9. Sovereign; potentate.
'Tis surprising to consider with what heats these two powers have contested their title to the kingdom of Cyprus, that is in the hands of the Turk. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
10. One invested with dominion.
After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Mat.
The fables turn'd some men to flow'rs,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial pow'rs,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Davies.
If there's a pow'r above us,
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Add.
11. Divinity.
Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the curst thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Cast down thyself, and only strive to raise
The glory of thy maker's sacred name;
Use all thy pow'r, that blest pow'r to praise,
Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the fame. Davies.
With indignation, thus he broke
His awful silence, and the pow'rs bespoke. Dryden.
Tell me,
What are the gods the better for this gold?
The wretch that offers from his wealthy store
These presents, bribes the pow'rs to give him more. Dryd.
12. Host; army; military force.
He, to work him the more mischief, sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and Redshanks into Ireland, where they got footing. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Never such a power,
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land. Shakespeare's K. John.
Young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philipp. Shakespeare.
Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along? Shakespeare.
My heart, dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain. Shakespeare.
Gazellus, upon the coming of the balsa, valiantly illud forth with all his powers, and gave him battle. Kneller.
13. A large quantity; a great number. In low language: as, a power of good things.
POWERABLE. adj. [from power.] Capable of performing any thing.
That you may see how powerable time is in altering tongues,
I will set down the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sundry ages. POWERFUL.

PRA

- PO'WERFUL. adj. [power and ful.]
1. Invested with command or authority; potent.

efficaciously; forcibly.
The sun and other powerfully lucid bodies dazzle our eyes.
By assuming a privilege belonging to riper years, to which a child must not aspire, you do but add new force to your example, and recommend the action more powerfully. Locke.
Before the revelation of the gospel, the wickedness and impurity of the heathen world was a much more excu-sable thing, because they had but very obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson's Sermons.
The grain-gold, upon all the golden coast of Guinea, is displayed by the rains falling there with incredible force, powerfully beating off the earth. Woodward.
PO'WERFULNESS. n. f. [from powerful.] Power; efficacy; might.
So much he stands upon the powerfulness of christian religion, that he makes it beyond all the rules of moral philosophy, strongly effectual to expel vice, and plant in men all kind of virtue. Halewell on Providence.
PO'WERLESS. adj. [from power.] Weak; impotent.
I give you welcome with a pow'rless hand,
But with a heart full of unfaint love. Shakespeare.
POX. n. f. [properly pox, which originally signified a small bag or pustule; of the same original, perhaps, with pox or spock.] We fill life pox, for a single pustule; pock, pox, Sax. pocken, Dutch.]
1. Pustules; efflorescences; exanthematous eruptions.
2. The venereal disease. This is the sense when it has no epithet.
Though brought to their ends by some other apparent disease, yet the pox hath been judged the foundation. Wifeman.

sign to paze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes and refluxes. Glauvill's Scopf.
PRACTICABLE. adj. [practicable, Fr.]
1. Performable; feasible; capable to be practised.
This falls out for want of examining what is practicable and what not, and for want again of measuring our force and capacity with our design. L'Estrange.
An heroic poem should be more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us, than was done by the ancients. Dryden on Heroick Plays.
This is a practicable degree of christian magnanimity. Att.
Some physicians have thought, that if it were practicable to keep the humours of the body in an exact balance of each with its opposite, it might be immortal; but this is impossible in the practice. Swift.
2. Asailable; fit to be assailed.
PRACTICABLENESS. n. f. [from practicable.] Possibility to be performed.
PRACTICABLY. adv. [from practicable.] In such a manner as may be performed.
The meanest capacity, when he sees a rule practicablely applied before his eyes, can no longer be at a loss how 'tis to be performed. Rogers.
PRACTICAL. adj. [practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr. from practice.]
Relating to action; not merely speculative.
The image of God was no less resplendent in man's practical understanding; namely, that forehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
Religion comprehends the knowledge of its principles, and a suitable life and practice; the first, being speculative, may be called knowledge; and the latter, because 'tis practical, wisdom. Tillotson's Sermons.
PRACTICALLY. adv. [from practical.]
1. In relation to action.

Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer and his bantering wit. Tate.
3. Dexterity acquired by habit.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.
4. Actual performance, distinguished from theory.
There are two functions of the soul, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects, some of which only entertain our speculations, others also employ our actions; so the understanding, with relation to these, is divided into speculative and practical. South.
5. Method or art of doing any thing.
6. Medical treatment of diseases.
This disease is beyond my practice; yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in prayer; and being allowed to visit us, he used the opportunity of a fit time thus to deliver us. Sidney, b. ii.

Partly with suspicion of practice, the king was suddenly turned. Sidney, b. ii.
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king. Shakespeare.
Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? this needs must be practice;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither? Shakespeare.
Wife flates prevent purposes
Before they come to practice, and foul practices
Before they grow to act. Denham's Sophy.
PRACTICK. adj. [πρακτικός; practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr.]
1. Relating to action; not merely theoretical.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences;
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoretick. Shakespeare.
Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they, by mutual calumnies, forfeit the practick. Gov. of the Tongue.
True piety without cessation tolt
By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.

Something too wildly, and my father's precepts

I therein do forget. *Shakespeare's Tempest.*What the great ones do, the less will prattle of. *Shakespeare.*A French woman teaches an English girl to speak and read French, by only prattling to her. *Locke.*There is not so much pleasure to have a child prattle agreeably, as to reason well. *Locke on Education.*His tongue, his prattling tongue, had chang'd him quiteTo footy blackness, from the purest white. *Ad. Ovid.*A little lively ruffick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle reason a whole evening. *Addison.*I must prattle on,

And beg your pardon, yet this half hour.

Let credulous boys and prattling nurses tell,

How if the festival of Paul be clear,

Plenty from lib'ral horn shall strow the year. *Gay.*PRATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,

After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,

Are idly bent on him that enters next,

Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

The bookish theorick,

Wherein the tog'd confus'd can propose

As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,Is all his soldierish. *Shakespeare. Othello.*The insignificant prattle and endless garrulity of the philosophy of the schools. *Glauco.*PRATTLER. n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.Poor prattler! how thou talk'st?

Prattler, no more, I say;

My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,

Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;

No room for prattlers there. *Herbert.*PRAVITY. n. f. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.

Doubt not but that sin

Will reign among them, as of thee begot;

And therefore was law given them, to convince

Their natural pravity. *Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.*More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. *L'Estrange.*I will show how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbelief of Christianity. *South.*PRAWN. n. f. A small crustaceous fish, like a shrimp, but larger.I had prawns, and borrowed a morsel of vinegar. *Shakespeare.*TO PRAY. v. n. [prier, Fr. pregare, Italian.]

1. To make petitions to heaven.

I will buy with you, sell will you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

Pray for this good man and his office.

N'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,

Except it be to pray against thy foes. *Shakespeare.*I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. *Shakespeare.*Is any sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. *James v. 14.*Unskillful with what words to pray, let meInterpret for him. *Milton.*He that prays, despairs not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Thou, Turnus, shalt atone it by thy fate,

And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late. *Dryden.*He prais'd his courage, pray'd for my success;

He was to true a father of his country,

To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.

P R E

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Wake.

2. To entreat; to ask submissively.

You shall find

A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.

Pray that in towns and temples of renown,

The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryden.

3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me is a slightly ceremonious form of introducing a question.

But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? *Bentley's Sermons.*4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.

Barnard in spirit, sense and truth abounds;

Pray then what wants he? fourcore thousand pounds. *Pope.*TO PRAY. v. a.

1. To supplicate; to implore; to address with submissive petitions.

How much more, if we pray him, will his earBe open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To ask for as a supplicant.

He that will have the benefit of this act, must pray a prohibition before a sentence in the ecclesiastical court. Aliff.

3. To entreat in ceremony or form.

Pray my colleague Antonius I may speak with him;

And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,

And pray him with the tribunes to come to me. *B. Johnson.*PRAYER. n. f. [priere, Fr.]

1. Petition to heaven.

They did say their prayers, and address'd themAgain to sleep. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

O remember, God!

O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shakespeare.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,

As he is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. *Shakespeare.*My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Romans x. 1.

Sighs now breath'd

Inutterable, which the spirit of *prayer*Inspir'd. *Milton.*No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

2. Entreaty; submissive importunity.

Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. *Stillington.*PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private

PRE

PREACHER, n. f. [prescheur, Fr. from preach.]

1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.
The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers.
You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith.
Here lies a truly honest man.

One of those few that in this town Honour all preachers; hear their own.
2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before.
PREACHMENT, n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent.
All this is but a preachment upon the text at last.

PRE-AMBLE, n. f. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainfayed or cooled, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contentions with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wing out some petty contentments.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation.

With preamble sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high.
I will not detain you with a long preamble.

PRE-AMBULATORY, adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in PRE-AMBULOUS, s. ufe.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth.

PRE-APPREHENSION, n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions.

PREASE, n. f. Press; crowd. Spenser. See Press.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chafe two and fifty youths.

PRE-ASSING, part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PRE-BEND, n. f. [prebenda, low Latin; prebende, Fr.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral.
2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop.

PRE-BENDARY, n. f. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries.
I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audon's, my gold bottle-ferew.

PRE-CARIOUS, adj. [precarious, Lat. precaire, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard,
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard.
Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust.

PRE-CARIOUSLY, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

Our scene precariously subsists too long

On French translation and Italian song:

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stages,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage.

PRE-CARIOUSNESS, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable.

PRECAUTION, n. f. precaution, Fr. [from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution.

To PRECAUTION, v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned.

PRECAUTIONOUS, adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for precautionous; precautionous, Lat. cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precautionous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions.

To PRECEDE, v. a. [precedo, Lat. preceder, Fr.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm;
But harm precedes not sin.

Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
To what the centuries preceding spoke.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECEDE, n. f. [from precedo, Lat.]

PRECEDENCY, s. ufe.

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past.

I do not like but yet; it does ally

The good precedence.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain

Some obscure precedence that hath before been said.

3. Adjustment of place.

The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell

Precedence; none, whose portion is small

Of present pain, that with ambitious mind

Will covet more.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedence.

That person hardly will be found,

With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;

Yet if another could precedence claim,

My fixt desires could find no fairer aim.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action.

PRECEDENT, adj. [precedent, Fr. precedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,

Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents unpurpos'd.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us.

What levity's in youth.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will.

PRECEDENT, n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,

The precedent was full as long a doing.

A reason

PRE

PRE

A reason mighty, strong and effectual,
A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
For me, most wretched, to perform the like.

No pow'r in Venice
Can alter a decree established:

'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law.

PRECEDENTLY, adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECENTOR, n. f. [precentor, Lat. precentor, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome.

PRECCEPT, n. f. [precepto, Fr. preceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour.

PRECCEPTIAL, adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use.

Men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;

Fetter strong madmen in a silken tread,
Charm ach with air, and agony with words.

PRECIPITATE, adj. [precipitatus, Lat. from precipit.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetic and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration.

PRECIPITOR, n. f. [precipitor, Lat. precipitor, Fr.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and precipitors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others.

It was to thee, great Stagyrite unknown,
And thy precipitor of divine renown.

PRECISION, n. f. [from precedo, precisus, Lat.] The act of going before.

PRECINCT, n. f. [precinctus, Latin.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light,

Directly towards the new-created world.

PRECIOUS, n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.

2. Any thing of high price.

The index or forerunner was too naked whereto to commit their preciousities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciousities.

PRECIOUS, adj. [precieux, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected only because the value of them lies hid.

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.

Why in that raven's left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking?

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor luck.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane.

PRECIOUSLY, adv. [from precious.] In a precious manner.

PRECIOUSNESS, n. f. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.

PRECIPICE, n. f. [precipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead.

No stupendous precipice denies
Access, no horror turns away our eyes.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages role.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;

Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice.

PRECIPITANCE, n. f. [from precipitant.] Rash haste; head-precipitancy. } long hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors.

PRECIPITANT, adj. [precipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause,
Downright into the world's first region throws
His flight precipitant.

The birds headless while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
Overtakes their speed; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to earth.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
And curle their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion.

PRECIPITANTLY, adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

To PRECIPITATE, v. a. [precipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To throw headlong.

She had a king to her son in law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery.

Ere vengeance

Precipitate thee with augmented pain.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls.

The virgin from the ground
Upstarting fresh, already clos'd the wound, Precipitates her flight.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight.

2. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short, intermittent and swift recurrent pains do precipitate patients into consumptions.

3. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well; but if they be stout and daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous.

Dear Erythraea, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor set them workings,
Till time shall lend them better means,
Than lost complaints,

3. To throw

PRE

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.
More of the same kind, concerning these precious saluts amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della valle.

PRECIOUSLY, adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.

2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS, n. f. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls.

PRECIPICE, n. f. [precipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead.

No stupendous precipice denies
Access, no horror turns away our eyes.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages role.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;

Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice.

PRECIPITANCE, n. f. [from precipitant.] Rash haste; head-precipitancy. } long hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars.

Hurried on by the precipitancy

PRE

3. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cofm.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.
Hadst thou been aught but gossamer feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating, Thoudst shiver like an egg. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment.
By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.
Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces encrease, which might hasten him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.
Barcephas saith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen to precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.
When the full stores their ancient bounds didtain,
Precipitate the furious torrent flows;
In vain would speed avoid, or strength oppose. Prior.

3. Hasty; violent.
The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

4. Precipitate. n. f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.
As the scar separated, I rubb'd the super-excrecence of flesh with the vitriol-stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wifeman's Surgery.

- PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.
Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; it was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Pope to Swift.

2. Hasty; in blind hurry.
It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

3. Not to bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he sinks, precipitately dull. Pope's Dunciad.

- PRECIPITATION. n. f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.
Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-fretch
Below the beam of fight, yet will I still Be thus to them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. Violent motion downward.
That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge, towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.
Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those supposititious changes. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. In chemistry, Subsidency: contrary to sublimation.
Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

5. The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

- PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.
Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. K. Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.
Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most deflected by the way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. How precious the time is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Evlyn's Calendar.

4. Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple holds,
Advice unfate, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

- PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.
Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

2. Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

24. Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

PRE

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baleneis, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakesp.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Adelant on Adelant.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.
The rallery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholys, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker, b. v.

2. When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker, b. ii.

3. He knows.
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his midnights present occasion,
His foes are so enrobed with his friends. Shakesp.

4. Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wotton's Architecture.

5. In his tract my wary feet have slept,
His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

6. The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot then precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holler.

7. Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton's Optics.

8. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

- PRECISENESS. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.
I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much preciseness. Dow.

- PRECISIAN. n. f. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.
Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.
A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

- PRECISION. n. f. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.
He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

- PRECISELY. adv. [from precise, Lat.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

PRE

PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precocious.] Ripeness before the time.
Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howell's Vocal Forest.

TO PRECOCITATE. v. a. [precogito, Lat.] To confider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cogniti, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONEIT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned conceits, appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

TO PRECONCIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of sagacity or care, defective.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South's Sermons.

PRECONCEPTION. n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hobbes.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract.] This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract;
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakesp.

TO PRECONTRACT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [from præcursor, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like præcursor of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shakesp. Lear.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. præcursor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the præcursor
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakesp. Tempest.

This contagion might have been prefiged upon consideration of its præcursor, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey on the Plague.

Thomas Burnet played the præcursor to the coming of Homer in his Homeries. Pope.

PREDACTIONS. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced by analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain. Sa. Boyse.

PREDATORY. adj. [predatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

1. Plundering; practising rapine.
The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

2. Hungry; preying; rapacious; ravenous.
The evils that come of exercise are, that it maketh the spirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

- PRECEDASSEL. adj. [præ and decessed.] Dead before.

- Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour. Shakesp. Henry V.

- PRECEDSSOR. n. f. [precedssor, Fr. præ and decess, Lat.]

1. One that was in any state or place before another.

- In their pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying precedssors. Sidney.

- There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites and long approved customs of our venerable precedssors.

- If I seem partial to my precedssor in the laurel, the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

- The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his precedssor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Addison.

- The more beautiful Close sat to thee,
Good Howard, envious of Apelles' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierd thy precedssor's heart. Prior.

- PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precocious.] Ripeness before the time.

- Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howell's Vocal Forest.

- TO PRECOCITATE. v. a. [precogito, Lat.] To confider or scheme beforehand.

- PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cogniti, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

- PRECONEIT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

2. Ancestors.

PREDESTINARIAN. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds the doctrine of predestination.

Why does the predestinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to ransack the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour he may secure an authentick transcript within himself. Ducay of Piety.

TO PREDESTINATE. v. a. [predestinare, Fr. præ and destinare, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irrevocable decrees.

Some gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratcht face. Shakesp. Lear.

Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his son. Romans viii. 29.

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Eph. i. 5.

PRE

To PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm or speak.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicated univocally touching him and any created being.

PREDICATE. n. f. [prædicatū, Lat.] That which is affirmed of the subject; as man is rational.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject.

PREDICATION. n. f. [prædicatio, Lat. from predicate.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predication and influence.

To PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Lat. predire, Fr.] To foretell; to foreknow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict public ruins, till his private are repaired.

PREDICTION. n. f. [prædictio, Lat. predictio, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These predictions

Are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known.

How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!

Measur'd this transient world the race of time,

Till time stand fix'd.

In Christ they all meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists.

He, who prophesied the best,

Approves the judgment to the rest;

He'd rather choose, that I should die,

Than his prediction prove a lie.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Foreteller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [præ and digestio.] Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and feeds of diseases.

To PREDISPOSE. v. a. [præ and dispo.] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun, to predispose and excite the earth and the seeds.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatreds of some persons towards others.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [præ and dispositio.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

It was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predisposition of the body.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina, Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superior influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves and treacherous by spherical predominance.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy.

The true cause of the Pharisees' disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will.

The several rays therefore in that white light do retain their colorific qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and dominus.] Prevalent; supreme in influence; ascendent.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this were predominant.

Foul subornation is predominant;

And equity exil'd your highness' land.

It is a planet, that will strike

Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful.

Those helps were outweighed by divers things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind.

PRE

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,

Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

To PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominare, Fr. præ and dominus, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord

Predominate in this fair lady's heart.

The gods formed women's souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate.

To PREDLECT. v. a. [præ and elect.] To chuse by previous decree.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [predominance, Fr. præ and eminence, Lat.] It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of es, predominance.

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epic poetry.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superstitious follies which are condemned by revealed religion.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Artaxia's beauty, such, as though Artaxia be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence.

He toucheth it as a special preeminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancestors.

I do invest you jointly with my power,

Preeminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,

Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares!

Painful preeminence.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men.

Beyond the equator, the Southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the North submits his preeminence.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and eminent, Lat.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker

In goodness and in power's preeminence.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preeminent rights of the household of faith.

PREDOMINANT. n. f. [præemptio, Lat.] The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, sought to make use of this preemption, but crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over.

To PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and engage.] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

The world has the unhappy advantage of preengaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys.

To Cipeus by his friends his suit he mov'd,

But he was preengag'd by former ties.

Not only made an instrument

But preengag'd without my own consent.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.] Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disarm all after-contracts made by guilt.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave.

PRE

To PREEN. v. a. [priinen, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds; to enable them to glide more easily through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird, on occasion, draws it with its bill.

To PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establish.] To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from preestablish.] Settlement beforehand.

To PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and exist, Lat.] To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul

Was form'd at first with myriads more,

It did through all the mighty poets roll.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistent, Fr. from preexist.] Existence beforehand; existence of the soul before its union with the body.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth.

As Simonides has exposed the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satyrized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. præ and existent.] Existing beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work.

Blind to former, as to future fate,

What mortal knows his preexistent state?

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

PREFACE. n. f. [præface, Fr. præfatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something preomial.

This superficial tale

Is but a preface to her worthy praise.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budæus in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs;

Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death

Defeated of his seizure.

To PREFACE. v. n. [præfari, Lat.] To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepit father.

To PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something preomial.

Thou art rash,

And must be preface'd into government.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense.

I love to wear cloaths that are flush,

Not prefaceing old rags with plush.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these fix, the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whoever will be faved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed.

PREFECT. n. f. [præfectus, Lat.] Governor; commander.

He is much

The better soldier, having been a tribune,

Prefect, lieutenant, prætor in the war.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and vice-roys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [præfectura, Fr. præfectura, Lat.] Command; office of government.

To PREFER. v. a. [preferre, Fr. præferre, Lat.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

3. With before.

He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war.

O spirit, that dost prefer

Before all temples th' upright heart.

PRE

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantic scene,

And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was preferred to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield.

He spoke, and to her hand preferred the bowl.

6. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.

They flatter disavouch

To yield him more obedience or support;

And as t' a perjur'd duke of Lancaster,

Their cartel of defiance they prefer.

I, when my soul began to faint,

My vows and prayers to thee preferred;

The lord my passionate complaint,

Even from his holy temple, heard.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses.

Take care,

Left thou prefer to rash a pray'r;

Nor vainly hope the queen of love

Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else. With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable.

PREFERABLENESS. adj. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragick poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preferre, Fr. from prefer.]

1. The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel.

Leave the critics on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollo's, Muses and Fauns, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern music.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul

To see the preference due to sacred age

Regarded.

2. With to before the thing postponed.

This passes with his soft admirers, and gives him the preference to Virgil.

It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary.

3. With above.

I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature.

4. With before.

Herein is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it.

5. With over.

The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [from prefer.]

1. Advancement to a higher station.

I'll move the king

To any shape of thy preferment, such

As thou'lt desire.

If you hear of that blind traitor,

Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

PRE

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to pre-ferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit.
All preferments should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.
All which declare a natural preference of the one into the motion before the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFERRER. [from prefer.] One who prefers.
TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figura, Lat.] To shew by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from prefigurare.] Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as prefigurations of the latter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The variety of propheties and prefigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figura, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there prefigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray,
And did prefigure here in devout taste,
The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Denne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly prefiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [prefigurare, Fr. præfigurare, Lat.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, prefigured unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knutley's Hist. of the Turks.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfixo, Lat.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the prefix'd hour of her awaking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shakespeare.

A time prefix, and think of me at last! Sandys.

Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June, wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,
He durst that duty pay we all did owe:
Th' attempt was fair; but heav'n's prefix'd hour
Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would prefix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale's Law of England.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them; if there are in nature any such prefix'd bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing: as, he prefix'd an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its prefixa and affixa, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.

It is a prefix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFIXION. n. f. [prefixion, Fr. from prefix.] The act of prefixing. DiD.

TO PREFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand.

If you consider the true cause,
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures and preformed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why you shall find,
That heav'n made them instruments of fear Unto some monstrous state. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray on the Creation.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections upon the appearance of admonitions. Swift's Miscel.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. pregnans, Lat.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Thou
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as fame reports, was built of old
By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

PRE

Through either ocean, foolish man!
That pregnant word sent forth again,
Might to a world extend each atom there,
For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Pri.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.

Call the floods from high, to rush again
With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds,
With which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

O detestable, passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Art.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforced position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio?
a knave very voluble. Shakespeare. Othello.

'Twere not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows, Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare. King Lear.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakespeare.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South's Sermon.

PREGUSTATION. n. f. [præ and gustus, Lat.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PREJUDGE. v. a. [prejudge, Fr. præ and judico, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he flood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the dishonour of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The child was strong and able, though born in the first month, which the physicians do prejudge. Bacon.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united sense of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby. Swift.

TO PREJUDICATE. v. a. [præ and judico, Lat.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial. Shakespeare.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent
Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREJUDICATION. n. f. [from prejudicate.] The act of judging beforehand.

PREJUDICE. n. f. [prejudice, Fr. prejudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the prejudice is against, but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudices, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon, b. viii.

My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly, silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury. This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less; perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession. In some of the following examples its impropriety will be discovered. I have

PRE

I have not spake one the least word,
That might be prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addison.

TO PREJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half-pillars wanted their expected height,
And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the sight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

No snares to captivate the mind he spreads,
Nor bribes your eyes to prejudice your heads. Anonym.

2. To oblige or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit prejudic'd by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Neither must his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgift.

I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though
I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube rescu'd, and the empire sav'd,
Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy softer vein,
To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL. adj. [prejudicialis, Fr. from prejudice.]

1. Obstructive by means of opposite prepossessions.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarend.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us, in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury's Sermons.

PREJUDICIALNESS. n. f. [from prejudicial.] The state of being prejudicial; mischievousness.

PRELACY. n. f. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ecclesiastick of the highest order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an archbishoprick and bishop-rick. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.

The presbyter, puff'd up with spiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible. Swift.

3. Bishops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker's Dedication.

PRELATE. n. f. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An ecclesi-astick of the highest order and dignity.

It befel me not the person of so grave a prelate, to be cither utterly without counsel, as the rest were, or in a common perplexity to shew himself alone secure. Hooker.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakespeare.

PRE

The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.

Yet Munster's prelate ever be accus'd,
In whom we seek the German faith in vain. Dryden.

PRELATAL. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelate or prelacy. DiD.

PRELATION. n. f. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.

In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co-partnership, without any prelacion or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE. n. f. [prælatura, Lat. prelature, Fr.] The PRELATURESHIP. n. f. [prælatus, Lat.] The PRELECTION. n. f. [prælectio, Lat.] Reading; lecture;

discourse.

He that is desirous to prosecute these assylata of infinitude, let him resort to the prelections of Faber. Hale.

PRELIBATION. n. f. [from prælibo, Lat.] Taste beforehand;
effusion previous to tasting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prelibation of those eternal joys. More's Divine Dialogues.

PRELIMINARY. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. præ limine, Lat.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majestick mien discovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY. n. f. Something previous; preparatory measures.

The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the preliminaries to the combat. Notes on Iliad.

PRELUDE. n. f. [prelude, Fr. præludium, Lat.]

1. Some short flight of mulick played before a full concert.

2. Something introductory; something that only shews what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppos'd
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Aeneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great. Addison.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another. Clarissa.

TO PRELUDE. v. a. [preluder, Fr. præludo, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either longer holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to sing by night. Dryden.

PRELUDIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a preludious bliss,
Two souls pickering in a kiss. Cleveland.

PRELUDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Prelude.

This Menelaus knows, expos'd to thare
With me the rough prelusion of the war. Dryden.

PRELUSIVE. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory;
proemial.

The clouds
Softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow. Thomson.

PREMATURE. adj. [prematuro, Fr. præmaturus, Lat.] Ripe too soon; formed before the time; too early; too soon said, believed, or done; too hasty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what possible consideration should persuade him to repent, till he deposited that premature persuation of his being in Christ. Hammond's Fundamentals.

PREMATURELY. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too soon; with too hasty ripeness.

PREMATURENESS. n. f. [from premature.] Too great haste;

PREMATURITY. n. f. [from premature.] Unseasonable earliness.

TO PREMEDITATE. v. a. [præmeditari, Lat. præmeditari, Fr.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

Where I have come, great clerks have purpos'd
To greet me with premeditated welcomes. Shakespeare.

With words premeditated thus he said. Dryden.

TO PREMEDITATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to premeditate; the spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

PREMEDIATION. n. f. [præmediatio, Lat. præmediation, Fr.
from premeditate.] Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for issue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myself.

A cold premeditation for my purpose? Shakespeare.

Hope is a pleasant premeditation of

PRE

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

PREMICES. n. f. [primitia, Lat. premisses, Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premisses or first gatherings. Dry.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Comden's Remains.

Thus families like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state. Swift.

TO PREMISE. v. a. [premissus, Lat.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premisses.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premisseth, and then infers. Burnet.

I premise thee particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To tend before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the premiss'd flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shaksp. Henry VI.

TO PREME'RIT. v. a. [premereor, Lat.] To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much premerited of them. King Charles.

PREMISES. n. f. [premissa, Lat. premisses, Fr.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premisses, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hosker, b. iv. f. 7.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premisses stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her foes conclusions were not found,
From premiss erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Miscel.

2. In low language, houles or lands; as, I was upon the premisses.

PREMISS. n. f. [premissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition.

This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion. Watts.

PREMIUM. n. f. [premiun, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run. Addison's Freeholder, N^o 23.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscel.

TO PREMONISH. v. a. [premonere, Lat.] To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous information.

After these premonishments, I will come to the competition itself. Watson's Architecture.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent

On your forbearance, and their vain event. Chapman.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service. Decay of Piety.

PREMONITORY. n. f. [from præ and monere, Lat.] Previously advising.

TO PREMONSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstrare, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNIRE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for a premonere. Bramhall against Hobbs.

Woolley incurred a premunire, forfeited his honour, estate and life, which he ended in great calamity. South.

2. The penalty so incurred.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from premunire, Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

TO PRENOMINATE. v. a. [prenominare, Lat.] To forename.

He you would found,

The youth, you breathe of, guilty. Shaksp. Hamlet.

PRENOMINATION. n. f. [præ and nominare, Lat.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the prenomination; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prenotio, Fr. præ and notio, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

PRE

The hedgehog's preference of winds is so exact, that it stoppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto prenotion of these winds ensuing. Brown.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted, by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. Shaksp. Henry VI.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.] The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a prenticeship, who sets up shop.

Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor his drop. Pope.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupare.] The act of taking possession before another.

TO PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupare, Fr. preoccupare, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspires to death; grief flies to it; and fear preoccupies it. Bacon.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, left the eye preoccupate the judgment. Watson's Architecture.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupatio, Fr. from preoccupare.]

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it. South's Sermons.

TO PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment. Arbutnot.

TO PREOMINATE. v. a. [præ and ominare, Lat.] To pre-nominate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to preominate his death. Brown.

PREOPINION. n. f. [præ and opinio, Lat.] Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, refraining from very many things. Brown.

TO PREORDAIN. v. a. [præ and ordinare.] To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin. Hammond.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,

The race of gods have reach'd that envied state. Rosam.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [præ and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtiers

Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordination and first decree
Into the law of children. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Lat. preparation, Fr. from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this great dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to press, with so little preparation, upon you. —You're welcome. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed. Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I with the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, au-thentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike and learned preparations. Shaksp.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparativus, Fr. from prepare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work. South's Sermons.

PRE

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparativus, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons. Hosker.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the instauration. Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Decay of Piety.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings. K. Charles.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it. South's Sermons.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey. Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician. Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. Tillotson.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories. Hale.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet.

TO PREPARE. v. a. [preparare, Lat. preparare, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare
Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war. Dryden.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomday wander in the shades of night. Dryden.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,
Had not the eye been fit for vision made;
In vain the author had the eye prepar'd
With so much skill, had not the light appear'd. Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round. Addison.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation. Psalms ciii. 36.

Now prepare thee for another fight.

He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal throne, to circumscribe
This universe. Milton.

4. To form; to make.

The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God to feed her. Rev. xii. 6.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the floods. Psalms xxiv. 2.

5. To make by regular process: as, he prepared a medicine.

TO PREPARE. v. n.

1. To take previous measures.

Efficacy is a power of speech, which represents to our minds the lively ideas of things so truly, as if we saw them with our eyes; as Dido preparing to kill herself. Peacham.

2. To make every thing ready; to put things in order.

Go in, sirrah, bid them prepare for dinner. Shaksp.

The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing. 1 Peter iii. 2.

3. To make one's self ready; to put himself in a state of expectation.

PREPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preparation; previous measures. Not in use.

In our behalf

Go levy men, and make prepare for war. Shaksp.

PRE

PREPONDERANCE. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of PREPONDERANCY. n. f. [from preponderare.] outweighting; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fish remora fastening, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew's Musaeum.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. a. [preponderare, Lat.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

PRE

PREPOSTEROUSLY, adv. [from preposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously. Shaksp. Midf. Night's Dream.
Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs, where another hath its liver, and all the other members pre- posterously placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley's Sermons.
PREPOSTEROUNESS, n. f. [from preposterous.] Absurdity;
wrong order or method.

PREPOTENCY, n. f. [præpotentia, Lat.] Superior power;
predominance.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals. Brown.
PREPUCE, n. f. [præpuce, Fr. præputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreskin.

The prepuce was much inflamed and swelled. Wifeman.
TO PRE-REQUIRE, v. a. [præ and require.] To demand previously.

Some primary literal signification is pre-required to that other of figurative. Hammend.
PRE-REQUISITE, adj. [præ and requisite.] Something previously necessary.

The conformation of parts is necessary, not only unto the pre-requisite and previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Before the existence of compounded body, there must be a pre-existence of active principles, necessarily pre-requisite to the mixing thereof of particles of bodies. Hale.
PREROGATIVE, n. f. [prærogative, Fr. prærogative, low Lat.]
An exclusive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prærogative. Sidney.

Our prærogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness Imparts this. Shaksp.

How could communities,
The primogeniture, and due of birth,
Prærogative of age, sceptres, and crowns,
But by degree, stand in authentick place? Shaksp.
The great Caliph hath an old prærogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Assyria. Knolles.
They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prærogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.
Had any of these second causes despoiled God of his præ- rogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celestial inforcements? Raleigh.
They obtained another royal prærogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleasure. Drakes.
The house of commons to these their prærogatives over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.
For freedom still maintain'd alive,
Freedom an English subjects' sole prærogative, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.
All with the dire prærogative to kill,
Ev'n they wou'd have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prærogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, so as to perceive them to be different, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.
I will not consider only the prærogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Ray on the Creation.
PREROGATIVED, adj. [from prærogative.] Having an exclusive privilege; having prærogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prærogativ'd are they less than the bane; Shaksp.
'Tis destiny unshunnable.

PRÆ, pres, presl, seem to be derived from the Saxon, preo, a priest; it being usual in after times to drop the letter s in like cases. Gilson's Camden.
PRÆSAGE, n. f. [præsa, Fr. præsa, Lat.] Prognostick; pretension of futurity.

Joy and shout præsa of victory. Milton.
Dreams have generally been considered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as præsa of what is to happen. Addison.
TO PRÆSAGE, v. a. [præsa, Fr. præsa, Lat.]
1. To forebode; to foreknow; to foretell; to prophesy.
Henry's late præsa prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shaksp. Henry VI.
What pow'r of mind
Foreseeing, or præsa from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd
How such united force of gods, how such As stood like these, could ever know repulse. Milton.
This contagion might have been præsa upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey on Consumptions.
With'd freedom, I præsa you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

PRE

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.
That by certain signs we may præsa
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The sov'reign of the heav'n's has let on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.

If I may trust the flattering ruth of sleep,
My dreams præsa some joyful news at hand. Shaksp.
Dreams advise some great good præsa. Milton.
That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, præsa
A greater storm than all the Turkish power Can throw upon us. Denham's Sophy.
When others fell, this standing did præsa
The crown thou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.
PRÆSAGEMENT, n. f. [from præsa.]

1. Forebodement; pretension.

I have spent much enquiry, whether he had any ominous
*præsa*ment before his end. Watson.

2. Foretoken.

The falling of salt is an authentick *præsa*ment of ill luck, from whence notwithstanding nothing can be naturally feared. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PRÆSBYTER, n. f. [præbyter, Lat. πρεσβύτερος.]

1. A priest.

*Præbys*ters absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies who in their stead did but read homilies. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

2. A *præbys*terian.

And *præbys*ters have their jackpuddings too. Butler.
PRÆSBYTERIAN, adj. [*præbys*terian, Lat. πρεσβυτεριαν.]

1. Consisting of elders;
a term for a modern form of ecclesiastical government.
Chiefly was urged the abolition of episcopal, and the establishing of *præbys*terian government. King Charles.
PRÆSBYTERIAN, n. f. [from *præbys*ter]. An abettor of præ- *bys*tery or calvinistical discipline.

One of the more rigid *præbys*terians. Swift.
PRÆSBYTERY, n. f. [from *præbys*ter]. Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the *præbys*tery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of *præbys*try, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.
PRÆSCIENCE, n. f. [præscience, Fr. præscience, Lat.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Foretell our præscience, and esteem no act
But that of hand. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Præscience or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, if we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and præscience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Rail.
If certain præscience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. Mare.
Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's præscience is certain. Saunders.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And præscience only held the second place. Dryden.
PRÆSCIENT, adj. [præsciens, Lat.] Foreknowing; prophetic.

Henry, upon the deliberation concerning the marriage of his eldest daughter into Scotland, had shew'd himself sensible and almost præscient of this event. Bacon.
Who taught the nations of the field and wood?
Præscient, the tides or tempests to withstand. Pope.
PRÆSCIOUS, adj. [præsciens, Lat.] Having foreknowledge.

Thrice happy thou, dear partner of my bed,
Whole holy soul the stroke of fortune fled;
Præscious of ill, and leaving me behind,
To drink the dregs of life. Dryden's Æneis.
TO PRÆSCIND, v. a. [præscindo, Lat.] To cut off; to abstract.

A bare act of obliquity does not only præscind from, but positively deny such a special dependence. Norris.
PRÆSCINDENT, adj. [præscindens, Lat.] Abstracting.

We may, for one single act, abstract from a reward, which nobody, who knows the præscindent faculties of the soul, can deny. Chene's Philosophical Principles.
TO PRÆSCRIBE, v. a. [præscribo, Lat.]

1. To set down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the strength of some negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument strong, by force whereof all things are denied, which scripture affirmeth not, or all things, which scripture præscribeth not, condemned. Hooker.
To the blanc moon her office they præscrib'd. Milton.
There's joy, when to wild will you laws præscribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.
When parents loves are order'd by a son,
Let streams præscribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.
2. To direct

PRE

2. To direct medically.

The end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he præscribes harsh remedies. Dryden.

The extreme ways they first ordain,
Præscribing such intolerable pain,
As none but Casar could sustain. Dryden.

By a short account of the pressing obligations which lie on the magistrate, I shall not so much præscribe directions for the future, as praise what is past. Atterbury.
Should any man argue, that a physician understands his own art best; and therefore, although he should præscribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God. Swift.
TO PRÆSCRIBE, v. n.

1. To influence by long custom.

A reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school, where being feasted with minor sentences, they præscribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To influence arbitrarily.

The assuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardness to præscribe to their opinions; is a constant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [Præscribo, Fr.] To form a custom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not præscribe or come into disuse, but by fifty consecutive years of exemption. Abb.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctor's bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Præscribe, apply, and call their masters fools. Pope.
PRÆSCRIPT, adj. [præscriptus, Lat.] Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Those very laws lo added, they themselves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confess both in matter of præscript attire, and of rites appertaining to burial. Hooker.
PRÆSCRIPT, n. f. [præscriptum, Lat.] Direction; precept;
model prescribed.

By his præscript, a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton.
PRÆSCRIPTION, n. f. [præscriptio, Fr. præscriptio, Lat. from præscribo, Lat.]

1. Rules produced and authorized by long custom; custom continued till it has the force of law.

You tell a pedigree
Of threecore and two years, a silly time
To make præscription for a kingdom's worth. Shaksp.
Use such as have prevailed before in things you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their præscription. Bacon's Essays.
It will be found a work of no small difficulty, to dispossess a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead præscription. Saunders's Sermons.
Our poet bade us hope this grace to find,
To whom by long præscription you are kind.
The Lucrèce plead præscriptions, for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.

2. Medical receipt.

My father left me some præscriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects; such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected For general sov'reignty. Shaksp.
Approving of my obstinacy against all common præscrip- tions, he asked me, whether I had never heard the Indian way of curing the gout by moxa. Temple.
PRÆSANCE, n. f. [præsa, Fr.] Priority of place in sitting.

The shells, though rude in their other fashions, may, for their different judgment in precedence and præsa, read a lesson to our civill'd gentry. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
PRÆSENCE, n. f. [præsa, Fr. præsa, Lat.]

1. State of being present; contrary to absence.

To-night we hold a solemn supper,
And I'll request your præsa. Shaksp.
The præsa of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies. Shaksp. Henry VI.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discomfited with unwonted præsa. Sidney, b. i.

Which once they knew authority did bear!
3. State of being in the view of a superior.

Thou know'st the law of arms is such,
That, who draws a sword in th' præsa 't's death. Sha.
I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a præsa here, to plead my thoughts.
Widow thy sister, and with her did I play
In præsa of th' Almighty. Shaksp.
Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning præsa. Glanswill's Steep.

PRE

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the præsa bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale.
—Ay; and no man in the præsa. Shaksp.
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.
Odmar, of all this præsa does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of præsa, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.
A graceful præsa bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Callier.
How great his præsa, how erect his look,
How ev'ry grace, how all his virtuous mother Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes. Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the præsa mount, whole glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Fairy Queen.
An't please your grace, the two great cardinals Wait in the præsa. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the præsa in the court of France, and spying Chantier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss, the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peascham.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready præsa of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from præsa of the mind, Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superior.

To her the sov'reign præsa thus reply'd. Milton.
PRÆSENCE-CHAMBER, n. f. [præsa and chamber or room.]
PRÆSENCE-ROOM, n. f. [præsa and chamber or room.]
The room in which a great person receives company.

If these nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's præ- sa, are so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no pattern to be admitted by. Locke.
Kneller, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delusive hand,
As in the præsa-chamber stand. Addison.

PRÆSENION, n. f. [præsa, Fr. præsa, Lat.] Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's præsa of winds is exact. Brown.

PRÆSENT, adj. [præsa, Fr. præsa, Lat.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commensurate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately præsa with all the beings of the world. Hale.
Be not often præsa at feasts, not at all in dissolute company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.
Much I have heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never præsa on the place
Of those encounters. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things can't represent
As præsa. Milton.
The moments past, if thou art wife, retrieve
With pleasant memory of the bliss they gave;
The præsa hours in pleasant mirth employ
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy.
The præsa age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory;
if he confer little, he had need have a præsa wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.
'Tis a high point of philosophy and virtue for a man to be so præsa to himself, as to be always provided against all accidents. L'Estrange.

4. Favourably attentive; not neglectful; propitious.

Be præsa to her now, as then,
And let not proud and factious men Against your wills oppose their mights. Benj. Johnson.
The golden goddess, præsa at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting his desire. Dryden.
Nor could I hope in any place but there,
To find a god so præsa to my pray'r. Dryden.

5. Unforgotten; not neglectful.

The ample mind keeps the several objects all within sight, and præsa to the soul. Watts.

6. Not abstracted; not absent of mind; attentive.

The

PRE

The PRESENT. An elliptical expression for the present time; the time now existing.

When he saw descend
The son of God to judge them, terrify'd
He fled; not hoping to escape, but thus
The present; fearing guilty, what his wrath Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
Men that let their hearts only upon the present, without looking forward into the end of things are struck at. L'Estr.

Who, since their own short understandings reach
No further than the present, think ev'n the wife, Speak what they think, and tell tales of themselves. Rome.
At PRESENT. [a present, Fr.] At the present time; now;
elliptically, for the present time.
The state is at present very sensible of the decay in their trade. Addison.

PRESENT. n. f. [present, Fr. from the verb.]

1. A gift; a donation; something ceremoniously given.

carry for a present to his lady. Shakefp.

He sent part of the rich spoil, with the admiral's ensign, as a present unto Solymann. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

Say heav'nly muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the infant God?

Haft thou no verse, no hymn, no solemn strain,
To welcome him to this his new abode?

They that are to love inclin'd,
Sway'd by chance, not choice or art

To the first that's fair or kind,
Make a present of their heart. Waller.

Somewhat is sure design'd by fraud or force;
Trust not their present, nor admit the horse. Dryden.

2. A letter or mandate exhibited.

To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

5. To put into the hands of another.

So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight. Dryden.

6. To favour with gifts. To present, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to present a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are to present a gift to a man; or, to present the man with a gift.

Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, hast no other reward, but sometimes to be smiled upon, and always to be smiled at. South's Sermons.

He now presents, as ancient ladies do,
That courted long, at length are forc'd to woo. Dryden.

Octavia presented the poet, for his admirable elegy on her son Marcellus. Dryden.

Should I present thee with rare figur'd plate,
O how thy rising heart would throb and beat. Dryden.

sential, because I consider God as omnipresent. Norris.

PRESENTIALITY. n. f. [from presential.] State of being present.

This eternal, indivisible act of his existence makes all futures actually present to him; and it is the presentiality of the object, which founds the unerring certainty of his knowledge. South's Sermons.

TO PRESENTIATE. v. a. [from present.] To make present.

The fancy may be so strong, as to presentiate upon one theatre, all that ever it took notice of in times past: the power of fancy, in presentiating any one thing that is past, being no less wonderful, than having that power, it should also acquire the perfection to presentiate them all. Greav.

PRESENTIFICTION. adj. [present and fictio, Latin.] Making present. Not in use.

PRESENTIFICKLY. adv. [from presentifick.] In such a manner as to make present.

PRESERVATION. n. f. [from preserve.] The act of preserving; care to preserve; act of keeping from destruction, decay, or any ill.

Nature does require

Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I give my tendance to. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

The eyes of the Lord are upon them that love him, he is their mighty protection, a preservation from stumbling, and a help from falling. Ecclesi. xxxiv. 16.

Ev'ry senseless thing, by nature's light,

Doth have the power of preserving, destruction shun. Davies.

Our allwise maker has put into man the uneasiness of hunger, thirst, and other natural desires, to determine their wills for the preservation of themselves, and the continuation of their species. Locke.

PRESERVATIVE. n. f. [preservativus, Fr. from preserve.] That which has the power of preserving; something preventive; something that confers security, and prevents decay.

If we think that the church needeth not those ancient pre- servatives, which ages before us were glad to use, we deceive ourselves. Hooker.

It hath been anciently in use to wear tablets of arsenick, as preservatives against the plague; for that being poisons themselves, they draw the venom to them from the spirits.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Were there truth herein, it were the best preservative for princes, and persons exalted upon such fears. Brown.

Bodies kept clean, which use preservatives, are likely to escape infection. Harvey.

the conversation of wicked men. Rogers.

Molly is an Egyptian plant, and was really made use of as a preservative against enchantment. Bacon's Notes on Ovid.

TO PRESERVE. v. a. [preservo, low Latin; preserve, Fr.]

1. To save; to defend from destruction or any evil; to keep.

The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and pre- serve me unto his heavenly kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 18.

God sent me to preserve you a posterity, and save your lives. Gen. xlv. 7.

She shall lead me soberly in my doings, and preserve me in her power. Wisdom ix. 11.

He did too frequently gratify their unjustifiable designs, a guilt all men, who are obnoxious, are liable to, and can hardly preserve themselves from. Clarendon.

We can preserve unharmed our minds.

To be indifferent, which of two opinions is true, is the right temper of the mind, that preserves it from being imposed on, till it has done its best to find the truth. Locke.

Every petty prince in Germany must be intreated to pre- serve the queen of Great Britain upon her throne. Swift.

2. To season fruits and other vegetables with sugar and in other proper pickles; as, to preserve plums, walnuts, and cucumbers.

This last complaint th' indulgent ears did pierce
Of just Apollo, president of verse. Waller.

PRESIDENTSHIP. n. f. [from president.] The office and place of president.

When things came to trial of practice, their pastors learning would be at all times of force to overpersuade simple men, who, knowing the time of their own presidentship to be but short, would always stand in fear of their ministers perpetual authority. Hooker's Preface.

PRESIDIAL. adj. [presidium, Lat.] Relating to a garrison.

TO PRESS. v. a. [presser, Fr. premo, pressus, Lat.]

1. To squeeze; to crush.

The grapes I pressed into Pharaoh's cup. Gen. xl. 11.

Good measure pressed down, shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. Luke vi. 38.

From sweet kernels press'd,

She tempers dulcet creams. Milton.

I put pledges of lint pressed out on the excoiation. Widem.

Their morning milk the peasants press at night,
Their evening milk before the rising light. Dryden.

After pressing out of the collected for oil in Lincolnshire, they burn the cakes to heat their ovens. Mortimer.

2. To distress; to crush with calamities.

Once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart. Shakefp.

3. To constrain; to compel; to urge by necessity.

The experience of his goodness in her own deliverance, might cause her merciful disposition to take so much the more delight in saving others, whom the like necessity should press. Hooker.

The posts that rode upon mules and camels, went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's commands. Ezher.

I was press'd by his majesty's commands, to assist at the treary. Temple's Miscel.

Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. Acts xviii. 5.

Wickedness condemned by her own witness, and pressed with conscience, forecasteth grievous things. Wisdom xvii. 11.

6. To enforce; to inculcate with argument or importunity.

Be sure to press upon him every motive. Addison.

PRE

They are enforced of very necessity to press the best and greatest part of their men out of the West countries, which is no small charge.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army by pressing, found opposition in many places.

The peaceful peasant to the wars is press,
The fields lie fallow in inglorious rest.

Must grandison Filbert to the wars be press,
You were pressed for the sea-service, and got off with much ado.

To press. v. n.

1. To act with compulsive violence; to urge; to distress. If there be fair proofs on the one side, and none at all on the other, and if the most pressing difficulties be on that side, on which there are no proofs, this is sufficient to render one opinion very credible, and the other altogether incredible.

A great many uneasinesses always soliciting the will, it is natural, that the greatest and most pressing should determine it to the next action.

2. To go forward with violence to any object.

I make bold to press
With so little preparation.

You're welcome.
I press toward the mark for the prize.

The Turks gave a great shout, and pressed in on all sides, to have entered the breach.

Thronging crowds press on you as you pass,
And with their eager joy make triumph flow.

Th' insulting victor presses on the more,
And treads the steps the vanquish'd trod before.

She is always drawn in a posture of walking, it being as natural for Hope to press forward to her proper objects, as for Fear to fly from them.

Let us not therefore faint, or be weary in our journey, much less turn back or sit down in despair; but press cheerfully forward to the high mark of our calling.

3. To make invasion; to encroach.

On superior powers
Were we to press, inferior might on ours.

4. To crowd; to throng.
For he had healed many, inasmuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him.

Counsel the may; and I will give thy ear
The knowledge first of what is fit to hear:
What I transact with others or alone,
Beware to learn; nor press too near the throne.

5. To come unseasonably or importunately.
To urge with vehemence and importunity.

He pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in.
The left blood he drew, the more he took of treasure;
and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other.

So thick the thriving army stands,
And press for passage with extended hands.

7. To act upon or influence.
When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither.

8. To press upon. To invade; to push against.
Patroclus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles.

Press. n. f. [pressio, Fr. from the verb.]
1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed.

The press is full, the fats overflow.
When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lacteal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from the faces.

They kept their cloaths, when they were not worn, constantly in a press, to give them a lustre.

2. The instrument by which books are printed.
These letters are of the second edition; he will print them out of doubt, for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two in.

3. Crowd; tumult; throng.
Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frightened, ran crying through the press of the people, O men wherefore do ye these things.

She held a great gold chain ylinked well,
And lower part did reach to lowest hell,
And all that press did round about her swell,
To catchen hold of that long chain.

Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Caesar.

Death having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; his siege is now
Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;

Which in their throng, and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears.

A new express all Agra does affright,
Darah and Aurengzebe are join'd in fight;
The press of people thickens to the court,
Th' impatient croud devouring the report.

Through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,
And scatters deaths around from both her eyes.

4. A kind of wooden case or frame for cloaths and other uses.
Creep into the kill hole.—Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk; but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places.

5. A commission to force men into military service. For press, If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a fow'd curst; I have misus'd the king's press damnably.

Concerning the musters and presses for sufficient mariners to serve in his majesty's ships, either the care is very little, or the bribery very great.

Press. n. f. [press and bed.] Bed so formed, as to be shut up in a case.

Presser. n. f. [from press.] One that presses or works at a press. Of the stuffs I give the profits to dyers and pressers.

Pressgang. n. f. [press and gang.] A crew that strols about the streets to force men into naval service.

Pressingly. adv. [from press.] With force; closely. The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents.

Pression. n. f. [from press.] The act of pressing. If light consisted only in pression, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies, which refract and reflect it: if it consisted in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion: and if it consisted in pression or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow.

Pressitant. adj. Gravitating; heavy. A word not in use. Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water are pressitant in their proper places.

Pressman. n. f. [press and man.] One who forces another into service; one who forces away. One only path to all; by which the pressmen came.

Pressmoney. n. f. [press and money.] Money given to a soldier when he is taken or forced into the service. Here Peasgood, take my pouch, 'tis all I own, 'Tis my pressmoney.—Can this silver fail?

Pressure. n. f. [from press.] 1. The act of pressing or crushing. 2. The state of being pressed or crushed. 3. Force acting against any thing; gravitation; pressure. The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone.

Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive.

4. Violence inflicted; oppression. A wife father ingeniously confessed, that those, which persecuted pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein.

5. Affliction; grievance; distress. Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing.

The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressures under which it labours.

To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults.

Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures, acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace.

6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression. From my memory I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All faws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copy'd there.

Press. adj. [press or press, Fr.] 1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word press man; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, press or ready to march at command.

PRE

PRE

Each mind is press, and open every ear,
To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us.

Gritus desired nothing more than, at his first entrance, to have confirmed the opinion of his authority in the minds of the vulgar people, by the press and ready attendance of the Vayuod.

2. Neat; tight. In both senses the word is obsolete. More wealth any where, to be breefe
More people, more handsome and press
Where find ye?

Press. n. f. [press, Fr.] A loan. He required of the city a press of six thousand marks; but, after many parleys, he could obtain but two thousand pounds.

Prestigation. n. f. [prestigatio, Lat.] A deceiving; a juggling; a playing legerdmain. A deceiving; a juggling; a playing legerdmain.

Pressures. n. f. [pressio, Lat.] Illusions; impostures; juggling tricks.

Press. n. f. [press, Italian.] Quick; at once. A word used by those that show legerdmain.

Press! begone! 'tis here again;
There's every piece as big as ten.

Press. n. f. [from press.] Without examination. Authors presumably writing by common places, wherein, for many years, promiscuously amassing all that make for their subject, break forth at last into useless rhapsodies.

To presume. v. n. [presumer, Fr. presumer, Lat.] 1. To suppose; to believe previously without examination. O much deceiv'd, much failing, hapless Eve!

Of thy presumption return! even perversely! Experience supplants the use of conjecture in the point; we do not only presume it may be so, but actually find it is so.

2. To suppose; to affirm without immediate proof. Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet are there many more to be presumed.

That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love; my pow'r rain'd honour more
On you, than any.

3. To venture without positive leave. There was a matter we were no less desirous to know, than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far.

4. To form confident or arrogant opinions. The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not presume so far upon myself, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys's undertaking.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts. In this we fail to perform the thing, which God seeth meet, convenient and good; in that we presume to see what is meet and convenient, better than God himself.

6. It has on or upon sometimes before the thing supposed, or causing presumption. He, that would not deceive himself, ought to build his hypothesis on matter of fact, and not presume on matter of fact, because of his hypothesis.

7. It has of sometimes, but not properly. Presuming of his force, with sparkling eyes, Already he devours the promis'd prize.

Presumer. n. f. [from presume.] One that presupposes; an arrogant person. Heavy with some high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwise great delvers do grow intolerable presumers.

Presumption. n. f. [presumptio, Lat. presumptio, Fr.] 1. Supposition previously formed. Thou hast shew'd us how unsafe it is to offend thee, upon presumptions afterwards to please thee.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing presupposed. A presumption, upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking.

3. An argument strong, but not demonstrative; a strong probability. The error and insufficiency of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things, as he hath not enabled them to prove.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness. I follow him not
With any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him.

5. Irreverent with respect to holy things. Thus I presumptuous; and the vision bright,
As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd.

6. Presumptuous Crete, that boasts the tomb of Jove.

7. To suppose as previous. In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; therefore the first impediment, which naturally we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things, without which we cannot live.

8. All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand.

9. To presuppose. v. a. [presupposere, Fr. prae and supponere.] To suppose as previous. In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; therefore the first impediment, which naturally we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things, without which we cannot live.

10. All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand.

11. To presuppose. n. f. [presupposition, Fr. prae and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

12. To presuppose. n. f. [prae and sumere.] Surmise previously formed. It was your presumption,
That, in the dole of blows, your son might drop.

13. To pretence. n. f. [prætextus, Lat.] 1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates. This pretence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real. With flying speed and seeming great pretence
Came running in a messenger.

3. So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority.

4. O worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean pretence, but honour.
Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

5. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

6. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

7. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

8. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

9. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

10. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

11. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

12. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

13. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

14. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

15. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

16. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

17. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

18. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

PRE

Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

It warns a warier carriage in the thing,
Left blind presumption work their ruin.

I had the presumption to dedicate to you a very unfinished piece.

5. Unreasonable confidence of divine favour. The awe of his majesty will keep us from presumption, and the promises of his mercy from despair.

Presumptive. adj. [presumptive, Fr. from presume.] 1. Taken by previous supposition. We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is a lion, and that a rose.

2. Supposed; as, the presumptive heir: opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous. There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both.

Presumptuous. adj. [presumptuous, presumptuous, Fr.] 1. Arrogant; confident; insolent. Presumptuous priest, this place commands my patience.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things. Thus I presumptuous; and the vision bright,
As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd.

3. Punish'd his presumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprise the dy'd.

4. Can't thou love
Presumptuous Crete, that boasts the tomb of Jove.

Presumptuously. adv. [from presumptuous.] 1. Arrogantly; irreverently. Do you, who study nature's works, decide,
Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire.

2. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour. I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course.

Presumptuousness. n. f. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

Presupposal. n. f. [prae and supposui.] Supposal previously formed. All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presupposal of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded.

To presuppose. v. a. [presupposere, Fr. prae and supponere.] To suppose as previous. In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; therefore the first impediment, which naturally we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things, without which we cannot live.

3. All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand.

4. To presuppose. n. f. [presupposition, Fr. prae and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

5. To presuppose. n. f. [prae and sumere.] Surmise previously formed. It was your presumption,
That, in the dole of blows, your son might drop.

6. To pretence. n. f. [prætextus, Lat.] 1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates. This pretence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real. With flying speed and seeming great pretence
Came running in a messenger.

3. So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority.

4. O worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean pretence, but honour.
Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

5. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

23. Assumption; presumption. I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

24. Assumption; presumption

PRE

3. Affumption; claim to notice.
Despite not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingeniously imparted. Evelyn.
4. Claim true or false.
Spirits in our just pretences arm'd Fell with us. Milton.
Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inhering property or power. Locke.
5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.
I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- TO PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Lat. pretendere, Fr.]
1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used.
Lucas, to lash his horses, bends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends. Dryden.
2. To portend; to forebode. Not in use.
All these movements seemed to be pretended by moving of the earth in Suffolk. Hayward.
3. To make any appearance of having; to allege falsely.
This let him know,
Left wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprised. Milton.
What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person. Tillotson.
4. To show hypocritically.
'Tis their interest to guard themselves from those riotous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty. D. of Pity.
5. To hold out as a delusive appearance; to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.
Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heavily form, pretended To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. To claim. In this sense we rather say, pretend to.
Chiefs shall be grudge'd the part which they pretend. Dry.
Are they not rich? what more can they pretend?
TO PRETEND. v. n.
1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It is seldom used without shade of censure.
What peace can be, where both to one pretend?
But they more diligent, and we more strong. Dryden.
In those countries that pretend to freedom, princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen. Swift.
2. To presume on ability to do any thing; to profess presumptuously.
Of the ground of redness in this sea are we not fully satisfied; for there is another red sea, whose name we pretend not to make out from these principles. Brown.
PRETENDING. n. s. [pretend, Lat. pretend]. One who lays claim to any thing.
The prize was disputed only till you were seen; now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims. Dryden.
Whatever victories the several pretenders to the empire obtained over one another, they are recorded on coins without the least reflection. Addison on Ancient Medals.
The numerous pretenders to places would never have been kept in order, if expectation had been cut off. Swift.
To just contempt ye vain pretenders fall, Pope.
The people's fable and the scorn of all.
Pretenders to philosophy or good sense grow fond of this sort of learning. Watts.
PRETENDINGLY. adv. [pretending, Lat. pretendens]. Arrogantly; presumptuously.
I have a particular reason to look a little pretendingly at present. Collier on Pride.
- PRETENSION. n. s. [pretensio, Lat. pretentio, Fr.]
1. Claim true or false.
But if to unjust things thou dost pretend,
Ere they begin, let thy pretensions end. Denham.
Men indulge those opinions and practices, that favour their pretensions. L'Estrange.
The commons demand that the consilium should lie in common to the pretensions of any Roman. Swift.
2. Fictitious appearance. A Latin phrase or sense.
This was but an invention and pretension given out by the Spaniards. Bacon.
PRETER. n. s. [preter, Lat. praeter]. A particle, which prefixed to words of Latin original, signifies before.
PRETERIMPERFECT. adj. In grammar, denotes the tense not perfectly past.
PRETERIT. adj. [preterit, Fr. preteritus, Lat.]. Past.
PRETERITION. n. s. [preteritio, Fr. from preterit]. The act of going past; the state of being past.
PRETERITNESS. n. s. [preterit, Fr.]. State of being past; not present; not future.

PRE

- We cannot conceive a preterit still backwards in infinitum, that never was present, as we can an endless futurity, that never will be present; so that though one is potentially infinite, yet nevertheless the other is positively finite; and this reasoning doth not at all affect the eternal existence of the adorable divinity, in whose invariable nature there is no past nor future. Bentley's Sermon.
- PRETERLAPSED. adj. [praeterlapsus, Lat.]. Past and gone.
We look with a superstitious reverence upon the accounts of preterlapsed ages. Glanville's Scip.
Never was there so much of either, in any preterlapsed age, as in this. Waller.
- PRETERLEGAL. adj. [praeter and legal]. Not agreeable to law.
I expected some evil customs preterlegal, and abuses personal, had been to be removed. King Charles.
- PRETERMISSION. n. s. [praetermissio, Fr. praetermissio, Lat.]. The act of omitting.
TO PRETERMIT. v. a. [praetermitto, Lat.]. To pass by.
The fees, that are termly given to these deputies, for recompence of their pains, I do purposely pretermitt; because they be not certain. Bacon.
- PRETERNATURAL. adj. [praeter and natural]. Different from what is natural, irregular.
We will enquire into the cause of this vile and preternatural temper of mind, that should make a man please himself with that, which can no ways reach those faculties, which nature has made the proper feed of pleasure. South's Sermon.
That form, which the earth is under at present, is preternatural, like a statue made and broken again. Burns.
- PRETERNATURALLY. adv. [from preternatural]. In a manner different from the common order of nature.
Simple air, preternaturally attenuated by heat, will make itself room, and break and blow up all that which resisteth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- PRETERNATURALNESS. n. s. [from preternatural]. Manner different from the order of nature.
- PRETERPERFECT. adj. [praeteritum perfectum, Lat.]. A grammatical term applied to the tense which denotes time absolutely past.
The same natural aversion to loquacity has of late made a considerable alteration in our language, by closing in one syllable the termination of our preterperfect tenses, as drov'n, walk'd, for drov, walk. Addison's Spectator.
- PRETERPLUPERFECT. adj. [praeteritum plusquam perfectum, Lat.]. The grammatical epithet for the tense denoting time relatively past, or past before some other past time.
PRETEXT. n. s. [praetextus, Lat. praetextus, Fr.]. Pretence; false appearance; false allegation.
My pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Under this pretext, the means he sought To ruin such whole might did much exceed His pow'r to wrong. Daniel's Civil War.
As chymists gold from brass by fire would draw,
Pretexts are into treason forg'd by law. Denham.
I shall not say with how much, or how little pretext of reason they managed those disputes. Decay of Piety.
They suck the blood of those they depend upon, under a pretext of service and kindness. L'Estrange.
- PRETOR. n. s. [praetor, Lat. praetor, Fr.]. The Roman judge. It is now sometimes taken for a mayor.
Good Cinna, take this paper;
And look you lay it in the pretor's chair. Shakespeare.
Porphyrus, whom you Egypt's pretor made,
Is come from Alexandria to your aid. Dryden.
An advocate, pleading the cause of his client before one of the pretors, could only produce a single witness, in a point where the law required two. Spektor, N° 55b.
- PRETORIAN. adj. [praetorianus, Lat. praetorianus, Fr.]. Judicial; exercised by the pretor.
The chancery had the pretorian power for equity; the star-chamber had the censorial power for offences. Bacon.
- PRETTILY. adv. [from pretty]. Neatly; elegantly; pleasingly without dignity or elevation.
How prettily the young swain seems to waltz
The hand was fair before. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
One faith prettily; in the quenching of the flame of a restless ague, nature is like people that come to quench the fire of a house; so busy, as one letteth another. Bacon.
Children, kept out of ill company, take a pride to behave themselves prettily, after the fashion of others. Locke.
- PRETTINESS. n. s. [from pretty]. Beauty without dignity; neat elegance without elevation.
There is goodness in the bodies of animals, as in the ox, greyhound and stag; or majesty and stateliness, as in the lion, horse, eagle and cock; grave awfulness, as in mastiffs; or elegance and prettiness, as in lesser dogs and most sort of birds; all which are several modes of beauty.
Those drops of prettiness, scattering sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to delectate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.
- PRETTY. adj. [præ, finery, Sax. prette, Italian; præt, prætigh, Dutch.]
1. Neat; elegant; pleasing without surprise or elevation.
Of these idle Greeks have many pretty tales. Raleigh.
They found themselves involved in a train of mistakes, by taking up some pretty hypothesis in philosophy. Watts.
2. Beautiful without grandeur or dignity.
The pretty gentleman is the most complaisant creature in the world, and is always of my mind. Spektor.
3. It is used in a kind of diminutive contempt in poetry, and in conversation: as, a pretty fellow indeed!
A pretty task; and so I told the fool.
Who needs must undertake to please by rule. Dryden.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot. Addison.
4. Not very small. This is a very vulgar use.
A knight of Wales, with shipping and some pretty company, did go to discover those parts. Abbot.
Cut off the stalks of cucumbers, immediately after their bearing, close by the earth, and then cast a pretty quantity of earth upon the plant, and they will bear next year before the ordinary time. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I would have a mount of some pretty height, leaving the wall of the enclosure breast high. Bacon's Essay.
Of this mixture we put a parcel into a crucible, and suffered it for a pretty while to continue red hot. Boyle.
A weazle a pretty way off flood leering at him. L'Estr.
- PRETTY. adv. In some degree. This word is used before adverbs or adjectives to intend their signification; it is less than very.
The world begun to be pretty well stocked with people, and human industry drained those inhabitable places. Burnet.
I shall not enquire how far this lofty method may advance the reputation of learning; but I am pretty sure 'tis no great addition to theirs who use it. Collier.
A little voyage round the lake took up five days, though the wind was pretty fair for us all the while. Addison.
I have a fondness for a project, and a pretty tolerable genius that way myself. Addison's Guardian, N° 107.
These colours were faint and dilute, unless the light was trajected obliquely; for by that means they became pretty vivid. Newton's Opticks.
This writer every where insinuates, and, in one place, pretty plainly professes himself a sincere christian. Atterbury.
The copper halfpence are coined by the publick, and every piece worth pretty near the value of the copper. Swift.
The first attempts of this kind were pretty modest. Baker.
- TO PREVAIL. v. n. [prevaleo, Fr. prevaleo, Lat.].
1. To be in force; to have effect; to have power; to have influence.
This custom makes the short-sighted bigots, and the warrier scepticks, as far as it prevails. Locke.
2. To overcome; to gain the superiority. With on or upon, sometimes over or against.
They that were your enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him as you. Shakespeare.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
On his bad errand. Milton.
The millenium prevailed long against the truth upon the strength of authority. Dunay of Piety.
While Malbro's cannon thus prevails by land,
Britain's sea-chiefs by Anna's high command,
Relistless o'er the Thulean billows ride. Blackmore.
Thus long could prevail
O'er death and o'er hell,
A conquest how hard and how glorious;
Though fate had fast bound her
With Styx nine times round her,
Yet musick and love were victorious. Pope.
This kingdom could never prevail against the united power of England. Swift.
3. To gain influence; to operate effectually.
4. To persuade or induce by entreaty. It has with, upon or on before the person persuaded.
With minds obdurate nothing prevails, as well they that preach, as they that read unto such, shall still have cause to complain with the prophets of old, who will give credit unto our teaching?
He was prevailed with to restrain the earl of Bristol upon his first arrival. Clarendon.
The serpent with me
Persuatively have so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.
They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, than it is an hundred to one will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is liker to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way.
There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, than it is an hundred to one will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is liker to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way.
There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

PRE

- The gods pray
He would resume the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harness'd steeds, that fill with horror shook. Addison.
Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevailed with to send her forces upon that expedition. Swift.
Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.
- PREVAILING. adj. [from prevail]. Predominant; having most influence.
Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same fate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.
Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rowe.
- PREVAILEMENT. n. s. [from prevail]. Prevalence.
Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth. Shakespeare.
- PREVALENCE. n. s. [prevaleo, Fr. prevaleo, low Lat.].

The duke better knew, what kind of arguments were of prevalence with him. Clarendon.
Others finding that, in former times, many churchmen were employed in the civil government, imputed their wanting of these ornaments their predecessors wore, to the power and prevalence of the lawyers. Clarendon.
Animals, whose forelegs supply the use of arms, hold, if not an equality in both, a prevalence oft times in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- Why, fair one, would you not rely On reason's force with beauty's join'd;
Could I their prevalence deny,
I must at once be deaf and blind. Prior.
Least of all does this precept imply, that we should comply with any thing that the prevalence of corrupt fashion has made reputable. Rogers's Sermons.
- PREVALENT. adj. [prevaleo, Lat.]. Victorious; gaining superiority.
Brennus told the Roman ambassadors, that prevalent arms were as good as any title, and that valiant men might account to be their own as much as they could get. Raleigh.
On the foughten field,
Michael and his angels prevalent encamping. Milton.
The conduct of a peculiar providence made the instruments of that great design prevalent and victorious, and all those mountains of opposition to become plains. South's Sermons.
2. Predominant; powerful.
Eve! easily may faith admit, that all
The good which we enjoy, from heav'n descends;
But, that from us ought should ascend to heav'n,
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will:
Hard to belief may seem. Milton's Par. Lost.
This was the most received and prevalent opinion, when I first brought my collection up to London. Woodward.
- PREVALENTLY. adv. [from prevalent]. Powerfully; forcibly.
The evening-star so falls into the main,
To rise at morn more prevalently bright. Prior.
- TO PREVARICATE. v. n. [prevaticare, Lat. prevaticare, Fr.]. To cavil; to quibble; to shuffle.
Laws are either dismantled or quite prevaticated through change and alteration of times, yet they are good in themselves.
He prevaticates with his own understanding, and cannot seriously consider the strength, and discern the evidence of arguments against his desires. South.
Whoever helped him to this citation, I desire he will never trust him more; for I would think better of himself, than that he would wilfully prevaticate. Stillington.
- PREVARICATION. n. s. [prevaticatio, Lat. prevaticatio, Fr. from prevaticare]. Shuffle; cavil.
Several Romans, taken prisoners by Hannibal, were released upon obliging themselves by an oath to return again to his camp: among these was one, who, thinking to elude the oath, went the same day back to the camp, on pretence of having forgot something; but this prevatication was so shocking to the Roman senate, that they ordered him to be delivered up to Hannibal. Addison's Freeholder.
- PREVARICATOR. n. s. [prevaticator, Lat. prevaticator, Fr. from prevaticare]. A caviller; a shuffler.
PREVENIENT. adj. [preveniens, Lat.]. Preceding; going before; preventive.

PRICE. n. f. [from prix, Fr. præcium, Lat.]
 1. Equivalent paid for any thing.
 I will buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God, of that which cost me nothing. 2 Samuel xxiv. 24.
 From that which hath its price in composition, if you take away any thing, or any part do fail, all is disgrace. Bacon.
 If fortune has a niggard been to thee,
 Devote thyself to thrift, not luxury;
 And wisely make that kind of food thy choice,
 To which necessity confines thy price. Dryden.
 2. Value; estimation; supposed excellence.
 We stand in some jealousy, left by thus overvaluing their sermons; they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hooker.
 Sugar hath put down the use of honey, inasmuch as we have lost those preparations of honey which the ancients had, when it was more in price. Bacon.
 3. Rate at which any thing is sold.
 Supposing the quantity of wheat, in respect to its vent be the same, that makes the change in the price of wheat. Locke.
 4. Reward; thing purchased at any rate.
 Sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed;
 What then? is the reward of virtue bread?
 That, vice may merit; 'tis the price of toil;
 The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil. Pope.
TO PRICE. v. a. To pay for.
 Some shall pay the price of others guilt;
 And he the man that made false foy to fall,
 Shall with his own blood price that he hath spilt. F. Quar.

Prisage, now called butlerage, is a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark loaded with wine, containing less than forty tuns, two tuns of wine at his price. Cowell.

PRISM, n. f. [prisme, Fr. πρίσμα.]

A prism of glass is a glass bounded with two equal and parallel triangular ends, and three plain and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end.

Newton's Opticks.

Here, awful Newton, the disflowing clouds
From fronting, on the fun, thy showery prism. Thomson.

PRISMATICK, adj. [prismatique, Fr. from prisma.] Formed as a prism.

If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a party would be drawnd, and another be dry. Derham.

Faulty eloquence, like the prismatick glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on ev'ry place;
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay. Pope.

PRISMATICALLY, adv. [from prismatick.] In the form of a prism.

Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur or mercury befalls the glass, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.

PRISMATOID, n. f. [πρίσμα and ἰδῶν.] A body approaching to the form of a prism.

PRISON, n. f. [prison, Fr.] A strong hold in which persons are confined; a gaol.

He hath commiffion
To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shaksfp. King Lear.

I thought

PRI

- For those rebellious here their pris'n ordain'd. Milton.
 I thought our utmost good
 Was in one word of freedom understood,
 The fatal blessing came; from prison free,
 I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily. Dryden.
 Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
 Set open to your slave the prison door. Dryden.
 The tyrant Æolus,
 With pow'r imperial, curbs the struggling winds,
 And sounding tempests in dark prisons binds. Dryden.
 He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors Set open to him, is presently at liberty. Locke.
 To PRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To imprison; to shut up in hold; to restrain from liberty.
 2. To captivate; to enchain.
 3. To confine.
 Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
 They, as they fung, would take the prison'd soul,
 And lap it in Elysium. Milton.
 Universal plodding prisons up
 The nimble spirits in the arteries. Shakep.
 Then did the king enlarge
 The spleen he prison'd. Chapman's Iliad.
PRISONBASE. n. f. A kind of rural play, commonly called prisonbars.
 The spachies of the court play every Friday at ciecho di canni, which is no other than prisonbase upon horseback, hitting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands. Sandy's Travels.
PRISONER. n. f. [prisonier, Fr.]
 1. One who is confined in hold.
 Cesar's ill-erected tower,
 To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
 Is doomed a prisoner. Shakep. Rich. II.
 The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and nastily kept. Bacon.
 He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only to his own folly, and who will pity his thraldom. Deacy of Piety.
 A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would;
 and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.
 2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.
 So oft as homeward I from her depart,
 I go like one that having lost the field,
 Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.
 There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English. Bacon.
 He yielded on my word,
 And as my prisoner, I restore his sword. Dryden.
 3. One under an arrest.
 Tribune, a guard to seize the empress straight,
 Secure her person prisoner to the state. Dryden.
PRISONHOUSE. n. f. Gaol; hold in which one is confined.
 I am forbid to tell the secrets of my prisonhouse. Shakep.
PRISONMENT. n. f. [from prison.] Confinement; imprisonment; captivity.
 May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,
 But hold himself safe in his prisonment. Shakep.
PRISTINE. adj. [pristinus, Lat.] First; ancient; original.
 Now their pristine worth
 The Britons recollect. Philips.
 This light being trajected only through the parallel super-ficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.
PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.
 Well, what was that scream for, I prithee? L'Estrange.
 Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
 To shock the peace of my departing soul?
 Away! I prithee leave me! Rowe's Jane Shore.
PRIVACY. n. f. [from private.]
 1. State of being secret; secrecy.
 2. Retirement; retreat.
 Clamours our privacies uneasy make, Birds leave their nests disturb'd, and beasts their haunts forsake. Dryden.
 3. [Privauté, Fr.] Privacy; joint knowledge; great familiarity. Privacy in this sense is improper.
 You see Frog is religiously true to his bargain, scorns to hearken to any composition without your privacy. Arbutnot.
 4. Taciturnity. Answer.
PRIVADO. n. f. [Spanish.] A secret friend.
 The lady Brampton, an English lady, embarked for Portugal at that time, with some privado of her own. Bacon.
PRIVATE. adj. [privatus, Lat.]
 1. Not open; secret.
 You shall go with me;
 I have some private schooling for you. Shakep.

PRI

- Fancy retires
 Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
 The harmless freedom, and the private friend. Anon.
 2. Alone; not accompanied.
 3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.
 When publick content of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were not private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politic overrule all private of like nature in the same body. Hooker's Preface.
 He sues
 To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
 A private man in Athens. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
 What infinite heartsease must kings neglect,
 That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
 That private have not too, save ceremony? Shakep.
 Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house. Peachment of Antiquities.
 The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets. Sandersen.
 Dare you,
 A private man presume to love a queen. Dryden.
 4. Particular; not relating to the publick.
 My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
 5. In PRIVATE. Secretly; not publicly; not openly.
 In private grieve, but with a careless scorn;
 In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
PRIVATE. n. f. A secret message.
 His private with me of the dauphin's love,
 Is much more general than these lines import. Shakep.
PRIVATEER. n. f. [from private.] A ship fitted out by private men to plunder enemies.
 He is at no charge for a fleet, further than providing privateers, wherewith his subjects carry on a pyrrical war at their own expence. Swift's Miscellany.
 To PRIVATEER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit out ships against enemies, at the charge of private persons.
PRIVATELY. adv. [from private.] Secretly; not openly.
 There, this night,
 We'll pass the business privately and well. Shakep.
 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately. Mat. xxiv. 3.
PRIVATENESS. n. f. [from private.]
 1. The state of a man in the same rank with the rest of the community.
 2. Secrecy; privacy.
 Ambassadors attending the court in great numbers, he did content with courtesy, reward and privateness. Bacon.
 3. Obscurity; retirement.
 He drew him into the fatal circle from a resolved privateness, where he bent his mind to a retired course. Watson.
PRIVATION. n. f. [privatio, Fr. privatio, Lat.]
 1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.
 For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
 But a privation of that grace within. Davies.
 So bounded are our natural desires,
 That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
 With bare privation sense is satisfy'd. Dryden.
 After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.
 A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine un-learned; these are privations. Watts's Logic.
 2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.
 3. The act of degrading from rank or office.
 If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.
 If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.
PRIVATIVE. adj. [privativus, Fr. privativus, Lat.]
 1. Causing privation of any thing.
 2. Consisting in the absence of something; not positive. Priv-ative is in things, what negative is in propositions.
 The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.
 The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life. Taylor.
PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.
 Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privativities; and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 PRIVATIVELY.

PRI

- PRIVATIVELY*. adv. [from privative.] By the absence of something necessary to be present; negatively.
 The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaic observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.
PRIVATIVENESS. n. f. [from privative.] Notation of absence of something that should be present.
PRIVET. n. f. The leaves grow by pairs opposite to each other;
 the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose, and divided at the top into five segments; the ovary in the center of the flower-cup becomes a globular soft fruit full of juice, in which are lodged four seeds. Miller.
PRIVET. n. f. Evergreen. It is distinguished from the phillyrea by the leaves being placed alternately upon the branches, whereas those of the phillyrea are produced by pairs opposite to each other: it hath three seeds inclosed in each berry, whereas the phillyrea has but one. Miller.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [privilegium, Fr. privilegium, Lat.]
 1. Peculiar advantage.
 Here's my sword,
 Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
 My oath, and my profession. Shakep.
 He went Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege
 Hath omnipotence. Milton.
 He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,
 Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham.
 Smiles, not allow'd to beasts, from reason move,
 And are the privilege of human love. Dryden.
 The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke.
 2. Immunity; publick right.
 I beg the ancient privilege of Athens.
 A soul that can securely death defy,
 And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.
 To PRIVILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.
 The great are privileg'd alone,
 To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.
 He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
 To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
 Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
 Ordain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.
 2. To exempt from censure or danger.
 The court is rather deemed as a privileged place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney, b. ii.
 He took this place for sanctuary,
 And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakep.
 This place
 Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.
 3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.
 Many things are by our laws privileged from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.
PRIVILEGE. adv. [from privilegium.] Secretly; privately.
 They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privily lend them the revenues. Spenser's State of Ireland.
PRIVY. n. f. [privatus, Fr. from privatus.]
 1. Private communication.
 I will unto you in privy discover the drift of my purpose;
 I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.
 2. Confidentiality; joint knowledge; private concurrence.
 The authority of higher powers have force even in these things which are done without their privy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
 Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
 Without the privy of the king, to appoint
 Who should attend him? Shakep. Henry VIII.
 All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.
 3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.
PRIVY. adj. [privatus, Fr.]
 1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.
 The party, gainst which he doth contrive,
 Shall seize on half his goods; the other half Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakep.
 2. Secret; clandestine.
 He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his manlines was spread every where. 2 Mac. viii. 7.
 3. Secret; not shown.
 The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezek. xxi. 14.
 4. Admitted to secrets of state.
 One of the privy council. Shakep. Henry VIII.
 One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of King Charles I. till the restoration, desired to be made a privy councillor. Speculator, N^o 629.

PRO

5. Confiscous to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.
 Sir Valentine
 This night intends to steal away your daughter;
 Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakep.
 Many being privy to the fact,
 How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.
 He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Gulliver's Travels.
PRIVY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.
 Your fancy
 Would still the same ideas give ye,
 As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.
PRIZE. n. f. [prix, Fr.]
 1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.
 If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakep.
 I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dryden.
 The railing such filly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and impiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.
 2. A reward gained by any performance.
 True poets empty fame and praise despise,
 Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.
 3. [Prix, Fr.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.
 The king of Scots the did send to France,
 To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
 And make his chronicle as rich with prizes,
 As is the ouzy bottom of the sea. Shakep. Henry V.
 With funken wreck. Shakep. Henry V.
 He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.
 Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
 Soon to obtain and long possess the prize:
 The pow'rs gave ear. Pope.
 To PRIZE. v. a. [from appraise; prix, Fr. apprécier, Lat.]
 1. To rate; to value at a certain price.
 Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
 Which I prize free. Shakep.
 Cast it unto the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at of them. Lech. xi. 13.
 2. To citem; to value highly.
 I go to free us both of pain;
 I prize'd your person, but your crown disdain. Dryden.
 Some the French writers, some our own despise;
 The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.
PRIZER. n. f. [prizeur, Fr. from prize.] He that values.
 It holds its estimate and dignity,
 As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
 As in the prizer. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
PRIZEFIGHTER. n. f. [prize and fighter.] One that fights publicly for a reward.
 Martin and Crambe engaged like prizefighters. Arb. and Po.
 In Fig the prizefighter by day delight. Bransford.
PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.
 Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.
 Matthew met Richard, when
 Of many knotty points they spoke,
 And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.
PROBABILITY. n. f. [probabilitas, Lat. probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.
 Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.
 As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker's Preface.
 If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright fallacy. South's Sermons.
 Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds, as are fit fully to satisfy a prudent man.
 Tillotson's Sermons.
 For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Watkins.
PROBABLE. adj. [probable, Fr. probabilis, Lat.] Likely;
 having more evidence than the contrary.
 The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

PRO

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.
They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they converted, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South's Sermons.
PROBABLY, adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.
Distinguishing betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange's Fables.
Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.
PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dict.
PROBATION, n. f. [probatio, Lat. from probo, Lat. probation, Fr.]
1. Proof; evidence; testimony.
Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakefp. Hamlet.
He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.
When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain fallshood for manifest truth. Locke.
3. [Probation, Fr.] Trial; examination.
In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. Trial before entrance into monastick life; noviciate.
I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.
PROBATIONARY, adj. [from probatio.] Serving for trial.
PROBATIONER, n. f. [from probation.]
1. One who is upon trial.
Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did practise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.
Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.
2. A novice.
This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.
PROBATIONERSHIP, n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.
He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.
PROBATORY, adj. [from probo, Lat.] Serving for trial.
Job's afflictions were no vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.
PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.
Vain the concern that you express,
That uncall'd Alard will possess
Your house and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted less
By Banquo's restless spirit:
Lead him but fifty lous d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice probation est?
Why do the gods indulge our stores,
But to secure our rest. Prior.
PROBE, n. f. [from probo, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.
I made search with a probe. Wifeman's Surgery.
PROBE-SCISSORS, n. f. [probe and scissor.] Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.
The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wifeman.
TO PROBE, v. a. [probo, Lat.] To search; to try by an instrument.
Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom.
He'd raise a blub, where secret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently probd the wound. Dryden.
PROBITY, n. f. [probitas, Fr. probitas, Lat.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.
The truth of our Lord's ascension, might be deduced from the probitas of the apostles. Fiddes's Sermons.
So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probitas of mind. Pope.
PROBLEM, n. f. [problema, Fr. πρόβλημα.] A question proposed.

PRO

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing, that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Although in general one understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Bacon.
This problem let philosophers resolve.
What makes the globe from West to East revolve. Blackm.
PROBLEMATICAL, adj. [from problema, problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.
I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.
Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guils, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.
PROBLEMATICALLY, adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.
PROBOSIS, n. f. [proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance thereunto.
The elephant wreath'd to make them sport
His lithe proboscis. Milton.
PROCA'CIUS, adj. [procaus, Lat.] Petulant; loose. Dict.
PROCA'CIETY, n. f. [from procaus.] Petulance. Dict.
PROCATARCTICK, adj. [προκαταρκτικός.] Forerunning; antecedent. See PROCATARXIS.
James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his flesh, without the precedence of any procatarctick cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey on Conjunctions.
The physician enquires into the procatarctick causes. Harv.
PROCATARXIS, n. f. [προκαταρξις.]
Procatarxis is the pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasion a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatarctick cause. Quincy.
PROCEDURE, n. f. [procedure, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.
This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligation upon man. South.
2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.
Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weights, all these have their distinct order and procedures. Hale's Origin of Manikind.
3. Produce; thing produced.
No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moist or herby substance. Bacon.
TO PROCEED, v. n. [procedo, Lat. proceder, Fr.]
1. To pass from one thing or place to another.
Adam
Proceeded thus to ask his heav'nly guest,
Then to the prelude of a war proceeds;
His horns, yet fore, he tries against a tree.
I shall proceed to more complex ideas. Dryden.
2. To go forward; to tend to the end designed.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
These things, when they proceed not, they go backward.
Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
3. To come forth from a place or from a sender.
I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Jo. viii. 42.
4. To go or march in state.
He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in. Anon.
5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of; to be produced from.
A dagger of the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakefp. Macbeth.
From me what proceeds
But all corrupt, both mind and will both deprav'd. Milt.
All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryd.
6. To prosecute any design.
He that proceeds upon other principles, in his enquiry into any sciences, posts himself in a party.
Since husbandry is of large extent, the poet singles out such precepts to proceed on, as are capable of ornament. Addison.

PRODIGAL. adj. [from prodigus, Lat. prodigium, Fr.] Profuse; wasteful; expensive; lavish; not frugal; not parcimonious.

Least I should seem over prodigal in the praise of my countrymen, I will only present you with some few verses. Cicero.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. Shaksp.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than the rest;
whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you will take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.

As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these affairs, now those,
Though prodigal of life, disdain to die
By common hands. Danham.

Here patriots live, who for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.

The prodigal of soul rush'd on the stroke
Of lifted weapons, and did wounds provoke. Dryden.

O! beware,
Great warrior, nor too prodigal of life,
Expose the British safety. Philips.

self; how hardly that house would be kept from impious profanation he knew. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
What I am and what I would, are to your ears, divinity;
to any others, profanation. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
I were profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.
All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.
Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.
2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.
Great men may jest with saints, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shaksp.
PROFANE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]
1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.
Profane fellow!
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more.
But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
These have caus'd the weak to fumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.
2. Not sacred; secular.
The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new-found world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things,
Not purified by holy rites. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be fowls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
To PROFANE. v. a. [profane, Lat. profanare, Fr.]
1. To violate; to pollute.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order. Shaksp.
Foretasted fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.
Pity the temple profan'd of ungodly men. 2 Mac. viii. 2.
How far have we
Profan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profigate the muse,
Debas'd, and prostituted to the vilest use. Dryden.
2. To put to wrong use.
I feel me much to blame.
So idly to profane the precious time. Shaksp.
PROFANELY. adv. [from profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.
I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. 2 Esdr. xv. 8.
Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. B. Johns.
That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Brome's Notes on the Odyssey.
PROFANER. n. f. [from profane.] Polluter; violator.
The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use whereunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour stained steel.
There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests. Gov. of the Tongue.
PROFANENESS. n. f. [from profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred.
Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness against thy oracle!
You can banish from thence familiarity and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets and their actors. Dry.

Edicts against immorality and profaneness, laws against oaths and execrations, we trample upon. Attorney.
PROFECTION. n. f. [profectio, Lat.] Advance; progression.
This, with profectio of the horoscope, unto the seventh house or opposite signs, every seventh year opposeth living natures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To PROFESS. v. a. [professus, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. To declare himself in strong terms of any opinion or passion.
Would you have me speak after my custom,
As being a profess'd tyrant to their sex?
Pretending first
Wife to fly pain, professing next the spy.
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee.
A foe profess'd to barren chastity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
2. To make a show of any sentiments by loud declaration.
Love well your father;
To your professing bosoms I commit him. Shaksp.
3. To declare publicly one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.
What, master, read you? first resolve me that.
I read that profess the art of love.
Without eyes thou shalt want light; profess not the knowledge therefore that thou hast not. Ecclus. iii. 25.
To PROFESS. v. n.
1. To declare openly.
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They profess, that they know God, but in works they deny him. Tit. i. 16.
2. To declare friendship. Not in use.
As he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever profess'd to him; why, his revenges must in that be made more bitter. Shaksp.
PROFESSOR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professus, Lat.] According to open declaration made by himself.
I could not grant too much to men, that being professors my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.
Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, was so much fettered amongst among the Romans. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
England I travelled over, professedly searching all places I passed along. Woodward.
PROFESSION. n. f. [profession, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than Your high profession spiritual. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all professions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our professions keep wounds tented.
No other one race, not the sons of any one other profession, nor perhaps altogether, are so much fettered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Spear's Sermons.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glenville's Serf.
Most professedly false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.
3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.
For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn profession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillotson's Sermons.
When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their professions, the complaint was applicable to christians.
PROFESSIONAL. adj. [from profession.] Relating to a particular calling or profession.
Professional, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.
PROFESSOR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon's Essays.
2. One who publicly practices or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences, are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.
3. One who is visibly religious.
Ordinary illiterate people, who were professors, that shew'd a concern for religion, seem'd much conversant in St. Paul's Epistles. Lake.
PROFESSORSHIP. n. f. [from professor.] The station or office of a public teacher.
Dr. Prideaux succeeded him in the professorship, being then elected bishop of Worcester, Sanderison succeeded him in the regius professorship. Walton.

To PROFFER. v. a. [profero, Lat. profferer, Fr.]
1. To propose; to offer.
To them that covet such eye-glutting gain,
Proffer thy gifts, and fitter servants entertain. Fairy Queen.
None, among the choice and prime
Of those heav'n-warring champions, could be found
So hardy as to proffer, or accept Alone, the dreadful voyage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Does Caro send this answer back to Cæsar,
For all his generous cares and proffer'd friendship? Addis.
2. To attempt.
PROFFER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Offer made; something proposed to acceptance.
Basilus, content to take that, since he could have no more, allow'd her reasons, and took her proffer thankfully. Sidney.
Proffers, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Shaksp.
The king
Great proffers sends of pardon and of grace,
If they would yield, and quietness embrace. Daniel.
Make a proffer to lay down his commission of command in the army. Clarendon.
But these, nor all the proffers you can make,
Are worth the heifer which I set to stake. Dryden.
2. Effay; attempt.
It is done with time, and by little and little, and with many essays and proffers. Bacon's Essays.
PROFFERER. n. f. [from proffer.] He that offers.
Maids, in modesty, say no, to that
Which they would have the profferer construe ay. Shaksp.
He who always refuses, taxes the profferer with indifference, and declares his assistance needless. Collier.
PROFICIENCY. n. f. [from proficio, Lat.] Profit; advance.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [from proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
Persons of ripe years, who flock'd into the church during the three first centuries, were obliged to pass through instructions, and give account of their proficiency. Addison.
Some reflecting with too much satisfaction on their own proficiencies, or presuming on their election by God, persuade themselves into a careless security. Rogers's Sermons.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [from proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language. Shaksp.
I am dispos'd to receive further light in this matter, from those whom it will be no disparagement for much greater proficients than I to learn. Boyle.
Young deathlings were, by practice, made Proficients in their father's trade. Swift's Miscel.
PROFICUOUS. adj. [from proficio, Lat.] Advantageous; useful.
It is very proficuous, to take a good large dose. Harvey.
To future times
Proficuous, such a race of men produce,
As in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
Her throne inviolate. Philips.
PROFITS. n. f. [profits, Fr.] The side face; half face.
The painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, or else shadow the more imperfect side. Dryden.
Till the end of the third century, I have not seen a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile, which gives us the view of a head very majestic. Addison.
PROFIT. n. f. [profit, Fr.]
1. Gain; pecuniary advantage.
Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour. Shaksp.
He thinks it highly just, that all rewards of trust, profits, or dignity should be given only to those, whose principles direct them to preserve the constitution. Swift.
2. Advantage; accession of good.
What profit is it for men now to live in heaviness, and after death to look for punishment? 2 Esdr. vii. 47.
Wisdom that is hid, and treasure that is hoarded up, what profit is in them both? Ecclus. xi. 30.
Say not what profit is there of my service; and what good things shall I have hereafter. Ecclus. xi. 23.
The king did not love the barren ways with Scotland, though he made his profit of the noise of them. Bacon.
3. Improvement; advancement; proficiency.
To PROFIT. v. a. [profit, Fr.]
1. To benefit; to advantage.
Whereto might the strength of their hands profit me. Job.
Let it profit thee to have heard,
By terrible example, the reward
Of disobedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To improve; to advance.
'Tis a great means of profiting yourself, to copy diligently excellent pieces and beautiful designs. Dryden.
To PROFIT. v. n.
1. To gain advantage.
The Romans, though possess'd of their ports, did not profit much by trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

PRO

2. To make improvement.
Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them;
that thy profiting may appear to all. 1 Tim. iv. 15.
She has profited to well already by your counsel, that she can say her lesson. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To be of use or advantage.
Oft times nothing profits more;
Than self-esteem ground'd on just and right. Milton.
What profited thy thoughts, and toils, and cares,
In vigour more confirm'd, and riper years? Prior.
PROFITABLE. adj. [profitable, Fr. from profit.]
1. Gainful; lucrative.
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man;
Is not so estimable or profitable,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shaksp.
The planting of hop-yards, sowing of wheat and rape-seed, are found very profitable for the planters, in places apt for them, and consequently profitable for the kingdom. Bacon.
2. Useful; advantageous.
To wait friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shaksp.
Then Judas, thinking indeed that they would be profitable in many things, granted them peace. 2 Mac. xii.
What was so profitable to the empire, became fatal to the emperor. Arbutnot on Coins.
PROFITABLENESS. n. f. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfulness.
2. Usefulness; advantageousness.
We will now briefly take notice of the profitableness of plants for physick and food. More's Antidote against Atheism.
What shall be the just portion of those, whom neither the condescension or kindness, nor wounds and sufferings of the son of God could persuade, nor yet the excellency, easiness and profitableness of his commands invite? Calamy's Sermons.
PROFITABLY. adv. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfully.
2. Advantageously; usefully.
You have had many opportunities to settle this reflection;
and have profitably employed them. Wake.
PROFITLESS. adj. [from profit.] Void of gain or advantage.
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful;
To leave that lately, which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shaksp.
PROFLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Lat.] Abandoned; loiter to virtue and decency; shameless.
Time sensibly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worse than theirs,
And we than ours; next age will see A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have skill enough to be. Ros.
How far have we
Prophan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love. Dryden.
Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather chafe
To guard your honour, and your life to lose. Dryden.
Melancholy objects and subjects will, at times, impress the most profligate spirits. Clarissa.
PROFLIGATE. n. f. An abandoned shameless wretch.
It is pleasant to see a notorious profligate seized with a concern for his religion, and converting his spleen into zeal. Add.
I have heard a profligate offer much stronger arguments against paying his debts, than ever he was known to do against christianity; because he happened to be closer press'd by the baillif than the parson. Swift's Miscellanies.
How could such a profligate as Antony, or a boy of eighteen, like Octavius, ever dare to dream of giving the law to such an empire and people. Swift.
To PROFLIGATE. v. a. [profligatus, Lat.] To drive away. A word borrowed from the Latin without alteration of the sense, but not used.
Lavatories, to wash the temples, hands, wrists, and ju-gulars, do potentially profligate and keep off the venom. Harv.
PROFLIGATELY. adv. [from profligate.] Shamelessly.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift's Miscellanies.
PROFLIGATENESS. n. f. [from profligate.] The quality of being profligate.
PROFLUENCE. n. f. [from profluens.] Progress; course.
In the profluence or proceedings of their fortunes, there was much difference between them. Watson.
PROFLUENT. adj. [from profluens, Lat.] Flowing forward.
Teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe Baptizing in the profluent stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin. Milton.
PROFOUND.

PRO

PROFOUND. adj. [profund, Fr. profundus, Lat.]
1. Deep; descending far below the surface; low with respect to the neighbouring places.

All else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound, as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damietta and mount Calvus old.
He hath hither thrust me down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound.

2. Intellectually deep; not obvious to the mind; not easily fathomed by the mind: as, a profound treatise.

3. Lowly; humble; submissive; submissive.
What words wilt thou use to move thy God to hear thee?
what humble gestures? what profound reverence?

4. Learned beyond the common reach; knowing to the bottom.
Not orators only with the people, but even the very profoundest disputers in all faculties, have hereby often, with the best learned, prevailed most.

5. Deep in contrivance.
The revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them.

PROFOUND. n. f.
1. The deep; the main; the sea.

God, in the fathomless profound,
Hath all his choice commanders drown'd.
Now I die absent in the vast profound;
And me without myself the seas have drown'd.

2. The abyss.
If some other place th' ethereal king
Possesses lately, thither to arrive,
I travel this profound.

TO PROFOUND. v. n. [from the noun.] To dive; to penetrate. A barbarous word.
We cannot profound into the hidden things of nature, nor see the first springs that set the rest a-going.

PROFOUNDLY. adv. [from profound.]
1. Deeply; with deep concern.
Why sigh you so profoundly?

The virgin started at her father's name,
And sigh'd profoundly, conscious of the shame.

2. With great degrees of knowledge; with deep insight.
Domenichino was profoundly skill'd in all the parts of painting, but wanting genius, he had less of nobleness.

PROFUNDNESS. n. f. [from profound.]
1. Depth of place.
2. Depth of knowledge.

Their wits, which did every where else conquer hardness, were with profundity here over-matched.

PROFUNDITY. n. f. [from profound.] Depth of place or knowledge.
The other turn'd
Round through the vast profundity obscure.

PROFUSE. adj. [profusus, Lat.] Lavish; too liberal; prodigal; overabounding; exuberant.
On a green shady bank, profuse of flow'rs,
Pensive I sat.

Oh liberty, thou goddess heav'nly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
One long dead has a due proportion of praise; in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse, and his enemies too sparing.

PROFUSELY. adv. [from profuse.]
1. Lavishly; prodigally.
2. With exuberance.

Then spring the living herbs profusely wild.
PROFUSENESS. n. f. [from profuse.] Lavishness; prodigality.

One of a mean fortune manages his store with extreme parsimony; but, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

PROFUSION. n. f. [profusio, Lat. profusio, Fr. from profuse.]
1. Lavishness; prodigality; extravagance.

What meant thy pompous progress through the empire?
Thy vast profusion to the factious nobles.

2. Lavish expence; superfluous effusion.
He was desirous to avoid not only profusion, but the least effusion of christian blood.

3. The great profusion and expence.
Of his revenues bred him much offence.

Trade is fitted to the nature of our country, as it abounds with a great profusion of commodities of its own growth, very convenient for other countries.

PROG. n. f. [from the verb.] Victuals; provision of any kind. A low word.

PRO

O nephew! your grief is but folly.
In town you may find better prog.

Spouse tucked up doth in patters trudge it,
With handkerchief of prog, like trull with budget.

PROGENATION. n. f. [progenies, Lat.] The act of begetting; propagation.
PROGENITOR. n. f. [progenitus, Lat.] A forefather; an ancestor in a direct line.

Although these things be already past away by her progenitors, former grants unto those lords, yet I could find a way to remedy a great part thereof.

Like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together.

All generations had hither come,
From all the ends of th' Earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.

PROGENY. n. f. [progenis, old Fr. progenies, Lat.] Offspring; race; generation.
The sons of God have God's own natural son as a second Adam from heaven, whose race and progeny they are by spiritual and heavenly birth.

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu'd from the progeny of kings.

Gift to his progeny of all that land.
The base degenerate iron offspring ends;
A golden progeny from heav'n descends.

Thus shall we live in perfect bliss, and see Deathless ourselves, our numerous progeny.

We are the more pleased to behold the throne surrounded by a numerous progeny, when we consider the virtues of those from whom they descend.

PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [prognosticatio, Lat.] Such as may be foreknown or foretold.
The causes of this inundation cannot be regular, and therefore their effects not prognosticable like eclipses.

PROGNOSTICATE. v. a. [from prognostic.] To foretell; to foreshow.
He had now outlived the day, which his tutor Sandford had prognosticated upon his nativity he would not outlive.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Neither will, nor can prognosticate,
To the young gaping heir, his father's fate.

PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [from prognostic.]
1. The act of foreknowing or foreshowing.
If an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.

Raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a frowning eye upon him, where he is to behold him, with flies blown to death.

This theory of the earth begins to be a kind of prophecy or prognostication of things to come, as it hath been hitherto an history of things past.

PROGNOSTIC. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The skill of foretelling diseases or the event of diseases.
Hippocrates's prognostick is generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy.

2. A prediction.
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verily'd at last.

3. A token foretelling.
Whatever you are or shall be, has been but an early prognostick from what you were.

PROGNOSTICK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The skill of foretelling diseases or the event of diseases.
Hippocrates's prognostick is generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy.

2. A prediction.
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verily'd at last.

3. A token foretelling.
Whatever you are or shall be, has been but an early prognostick from what you were.

PROGRESS. n. f. [progrus, Fr. from progressus, Lat.]
1. Course; procession; passage.

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guests how near to-day.

Her rosy progress smiling,
The Sylphs behold it kindling as it dies,
And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

2. Advancement;

PRO

2. Advancement; motion forward.
Through all thy veins shall run
Each vital spirit, for no pulse shall keep His natural progress, but surcease to beat.

PROGRESS. n. f. [progrus, Fr. from progressus, Lat.]
1. This motion worketh in round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it findeth the deliverance easiest.

Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men.

Whoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the earth, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable.

It is impossible the mind should ever be stopped in its progress in this space.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into the endless expanse.

Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.
This day to Dagon is a solemn feast,
Thy strength they know surpassing human race,
And now some publick proof thereof require
To honour this great feast. Milton's Agonistes.
When the imagination hath contrived the frame of such an instrument, and conceives that the event must infallibly answer its hopes, yet then does it strangely deceive in the proof. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryd.
My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addison.
Here for ever must I stay,
Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.
3. Firm temper; impetunability; the state of being wrought and hardened, till the expected strength is found by trial to be attained.
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point:
To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my stars.
With arms of proof, both for myself and thee,
Chuse thou the best. Dryden.
4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.
He Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shaksp. Macbeth.

1. Impenetrable; able to resist.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. Shaksp.
Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, list thee, and confels have found thee
Proof against all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
He past expression lov'd,
Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd. Dryden.
When the mind is thoroughly tinctured, the man will be proof against all oppositions. Collier.
Guileless of hate, and proof against desire;
That all things weighs, and nothing can admire. Dryden.
When a capuchin, that was thought proof against bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addison.
2. It has either to or against before the power to be resisted.
Imagin'd wife,
Constant, mature, proof against all assaults.
Deep in the snowy Alps, a lump of ice
By frost was harden'd to a mighty price;
Proof to the sun it now securely lies,
And the warm dog-star's hottest rage defies. Addison.
The God of day,
To make him proof against the burning ray,
His temples with celestial ointment wet. Addison.
PROOFLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.
be a very courteous adversary, that can grant them. Boyle.

What we by day
Lop overgrown, or proof, or bind,
One night derides. Milton.
2. To support by standing under or against.
Like these earth unsupported keeps its place,
Though no fix bottom proof the weighty mass.
Eternal snows the growing mass supply,
Till the bright mountains proof th' incumbent sky;
As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

PRO

3. To sustain; to support.
The nearer I find myself verging to that period, which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left me. Pope.
PROP. n. f. [from proptus, Dutch.] A support; a stay; that on which any thing rests.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shaksp.
You take my house, when you do take the prop.
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shaksp.
Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.
That he might on many props repose,
He strengthens his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.
Again, if by the body's prop we stand,
If on the body's life, her life depend,
As Meleager's on the fatal brand,
The body's good the only would intend. Davies.
Fairrest unsupported flower
From her belt prop so far. Milton.
The current of his victories found no stop,
Till Cromwell came, his party's chiefest prop. Waller.
'Twas a considerable time before the great fragments that fell rested in a firm posture; for the props and stays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Barnet.
The prop return
Into thy house, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryden.
PROPAGABLE. adj. [from propagare.] Such as may be spread; such as may be continued by succession.
Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar seed, constitute a distinct propagable sort of creatures. Boyle.
TO PROPAGATE. v. a. [from propago, Latin.]
1. To continue or spread by generation or successive production.
All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget,
Is propagated curse! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Is it an elder brother's duty lo
To propagate his family and name;
You would not have yours die and buried with you? Drayton.
From hills and dales the cheerful cries rebound;
For echo hunts along, and propagates the sound. Dryden.
2. To extend; to widen.
I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the base of th' mount
Is rank'd with all desires, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bottom of this sphere
To propagate their states. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
3. To carry on from place to place; to promote.
Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of Piety.
Who are those that truth must propagate,
Within the confines of my father's state. Dryden.
Those who seek truth only, and desire to propagate nothing else, freely expose their principles to the test. Locke.
Because dense bodies conserve their heat a long time, and the densest bodies conserve their heat the longest, the vibrations of their parts are of a lasting nature; and therefore may be propagated along solid fibres of uniform dense matter to a great distance, for conveying into the brain the impressions made upon all the organs of sense. Newton.
4. To encrease; to promote.
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have them prest
With more of thine. Shaksp.
Sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.
5. To generate.

But nobler vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.
PROPAGATOR. n. f. [from propagare.]
1. One who continues by successive production.
2. A spreader; a promoter.
Socrates, the greatest propagator of morality, and a martyr for the unity of the Godhead, was so famous for this talent, that he gained the name of the Drole. Addison.
TO PROPEL. v. a. [from propello, Lat.] To drive forward.
Avicen witnesses the blood to be frothy, that is propelled out of a vein of the breast. Harvey.
This

PRO

This motion, in some human creatures, may be weak in respect to the vicidity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

That overplus of motion would be too feeble and languid to propel so vast and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley's Sermons.

To PROPEL. v. n. [propendo, Lat. to hang forwards.] To incline to any part; to be disposed in favour of any thing. My sprightly brethren, I propend to you, In resolution to keep Helen still. Shaksp.

PROPENDENCY. n. f. [from propendo.] 1. Inclination or tendency of desire to any thing. 2. [From propendo, Lat. to weigh.] Preconsideration; attentive deliberation; perpendency. An act above the animal actions, which are transient, and admit not of that attention, and propensity of actions. Hale.

PROPELSE. adj. [propensius, Lat.] Inclined; disposed. It is used both of good and bad. Women, propense and inclinable to holiness, be otherwise edified in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hooker's Preface.

I have brought scandal In feeble hearts, propense enough before To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.

PROPELSION. } n. f. [propensio, Fr. propensio, Lat. from PROPELSE. } propensio.] 1. Inclination; disposition to any thing good or bad. Some miscarriages might escape, rather through necessities of state, than any propensity of myself to injuriousness. K. Char. So forcible are our propensities to mutiny, that we equally take occasions from benefits or injuries. Gov. of the Tongue. Let there be but propensity, and bent of will to religion, and there will be fecundity and indefatigable industry. South. It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propensities of a child. L'Estrange. The natural propension, and the inevitable occasions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Temple. He affixes us with a measure of grace, sufficient to over-balance the corrupt propensity of the will. Rogers.

2. Tendency. Bodies, that of themselves have no propensities to any determinate place, do nevertheless move constantly and perpetually one way. Digby. This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids. Arbutnot.

PROPER. adj. [proprio, Fr. proprius, Latin.] 1. Peculiar; not belonging to more; not common. As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteousness and honesty of life, we do not mention them, because they are not proper unto christian men as they are christian, but do concern them as they are men. Hooker. Men of learning hold it for a slip in judgment, when offer is made to demonstrate that as proper to one thing, which reason findeth common unto many. Hooker. No fence the precious joys conceives, Which in her private contemplations be; For then the ravish'd spirit the senses leaves, Hath her own pow'rs, and proper actions free. Davies. Of nought no creature ever formed ought, For that is proper to th' Almighty's hand. Davies. Duffrenoy's rules, concerning the posture of the figures, are almost wholly proper to painting, and admit not any comparison with poetry. Dryden's Duffrenoy. Outward objects, that are extrinsecal to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsecal and proper to itself, which become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Lake.

2. Noting an individual. A proper name may become common, when given to several beings of the same kind; as Caesar. Watts. 3. One's own. It is joined with any of the possessives: as, my proper, their proper. The bloody book of law You shall yourself read in the bitter letter, After your own sense; yea, though our proper son Stood in your action. Shaksp. Othello. Court the age With somewhat of your proper rage. Waller. If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all voted axioms. Glanville's Steps. Now learn the difference at your proper cost, Betwixt true valour and an empty boast. Dryden.

4. Natural; original. In our proper motion we ascend Up to our native seat. Milton. 5. Fit; accommodated; adapted; suitable; qualified. In Athens all was pleasure, mirth and plays, All proper to the springs, and sprightly May. Dryden. He is the only proper person of all others for an Epic poem, who, to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.

PRO

PROPERNESS. n. f. [from proper.] 1. The quality of being proper. 2. Tallness. 3. Peculiar quality. What special property or quality is that, which being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls? Hooker, b. v. f. 22. A secondary essential mode, is any attribute of a thing, which is not of primary consideration, and is called a property. 2. Quality; disposition. 'Tis convictions, not force, that must induce assent; and sure the logic of a conquering sword has no great property that way; silence it may, but convince it cannot. D. of Prat. It is the property of an old finner to find delight in reviewing his own villanies in others. South's Sermons.

3. Right of possession. Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Lake. Property, whose original is from the right a man has to use any of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the proprietor, so that he may even destroy the thing that he has property in. Lake. 4. Possession held in one's own right. For numerous blessings yearly show'd, And property with plenty crown'd, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

5. The thing possessed. 'Tis a thing impossible I should love thee but as a property. No wonder such men are true to a government, where liberty runs so high, where property is so well secured. Swift. 6. Neame's or right. I know not which is the fence in the following lines. Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity, and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me, Hold thee. Shaksp. King Lear. 7. Something useful; an appendage. I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. *Shaksp. PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.
The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate. Grew.
The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes;

PRO

- but the invention of burning glasses depended on a proportionate; for that figure, which contracts the species of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied. Grew's Conf.
In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power, to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, so far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.
To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.] To adjust, according to settled rates, to something else.
The parallelism and due proportionate inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.
Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionate by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and descend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space. Bentley's Sermon.
PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.
By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception, as is necessary for its sensible being. Hale.
PROPOSAL. n. f. [from proposere.]
1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result. Milton.
The work, you mention, will sufficiently recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals. Add. to Po.
2. Offer to the mind.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than refuse it. South.
This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the first proposal. Atterbury.
To PROPOSE. v. a. [from proposere, Fr. proponere, Lat.] To offer to the consideration.
Raphael to Adam's doubt propos'd, Benevolent and facil thus reply'd.
My design is to treat only of those, who have chiefly propos'd to themselves the latter as the principal reward of their labours. Tatler, N^o 81.
In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first propos'd to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part. Watts.
To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.
Run thee into the parlour,
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice, Proposing with the prince and Claudio. Shakespeare.
PROPOSER. n. f. [from proposere.] One that offers any thing to consideration.
Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer, as coming from God. Locke.
He provided a statute, that whoever propos'd any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck; if the matter propos'd were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hang'd. Swift.
PROPOSITION. n. f. [from proposition, Fr. propositione, Lat.]
1. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or decreed.
Chrysippus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself. Hammond.
The compounding of the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition. Hale.
2. Proposal; offer of terms.
The enemy sent propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted. Clarendon.
PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.] Considered as a proposition.
If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals. Watts's Logic.
To PROPOUND. v. a. [from proponere, Lat.]
1. To offer to consideration; to propose.
The parliament, which now is held, decreed
Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.
To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule.
Dar't thou to the son of God propound
To worship thee. Milton.
The greatest stranger must propound the argument. Mary.
The arguments, which christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently. Tillotson.
2. To offer; to exhibit.
A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him. Shakespeare.
PROPOUNDER. n. f. [from proponere.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.

PROPRIETARY

PRO

- PROPRIETARY. n. f. [from proprietaire, Fr. from propriety.] Possessor in his own right.
'Tis a great mistake to think ourselves stewards in some of God's gifts, and proprietaries in others: they are all equally to be employed, according to the designation of the donor. Government of the Tongue.
PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.
Though sheep, which are proprietaries, are seldom marked, yet they are not apt to straggle. Grew's Conf.
PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprius, Lat.] A possessor in his own right.
Man, by being master of himself, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labour of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property.
Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor. Rogers.
PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprietaire.] A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.
A big-bellied bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burthen in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her excuse. L'Estrange.
PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprius, Fr. proprietas, Lat.]
1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.
You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,
Know women's hearts like straws do move. Suckling.
Benefit of peace, and vacation for piety, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
Hail wedded love! mysterious law; true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise! of all things common else. Milton.
They secure propriety and peace. Dryden.
To that we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Atterbury.
2. Accuracy; justness.
Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language. Locke.
PROPT, for propud. [from propus.] Sustained by some prop.
See in her cell sad Elodia spread,
Propt in some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.
To PROPUGN. v. a. [from propugnare, Lat.] To defend; to vindicate.
Thankfulness is our meet tribute to those sacred champions for propugnating of our faith. Hammond.
PROPUGNATION. n. f. [from propugnare, from propugnus, Latin.] Defence.
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the pull and empty of those
This quarrel would excite! Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugnare.] A defender.
So zealous propugnators are they of their native creed, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. G. v. of the Tongue.
PROPULSION. n. f. [from propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.
Joy worketh by propulsin of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon.
The evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsin be carried off with the fluid continually. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
PROPE. n. f. [from prorare, Lat.] The prow; the forepart of the ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.
There no vessel, with vermilion proue,
Or bark of traffick, glides from shore to shore. Pope.
PROROGATION. n. f. [from prorogatio, from prorogare, Lat. prorogatio, Fr.]
1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.
The fulness and effluence of man's enjoyments in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition, but only of the prorogation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South.
2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.
It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a prorogation. Swift.
To PROROGUE. v. a. [from prorogare, Lat. prorogare, Fr.]
1. To protract; to prolong.
He prorogued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from publick cares. Dryden.
2. To put off; to delay.
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love. Shakespeare.
3. To interrupt the session of parliament to a distant time.
By the king's authority alone, they are assembled, and by him alone they are prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.
PRORUPTION. n. f. [from prorumpere, from prorumpere, Lat.] The act of bursting out.

PRO

- Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereat, excluding but one a day, the latter brood impatient by a forcible prorruption anticipates their period of exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errurs.
PRORUPT. adj. [from prorumpere, Fr. prorumpere, from prorumpere, Lat.] Belonging to prose; resembling prose.
To PROSCRIBE. v. a. [from proscribere, Lat.]
1. To censure capitally; to doom to destruction.
Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and proscribed. Spenser.
I hid for thee
Thy murder of thy brother, being so brib'd,
And writ him in the list of my proscrib'd
After thy fact. Benj. Johnson.
Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,
But dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense. Roscommon.
Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed if taken by us in that sense, in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South's Sermons.
2. To interdict. Not in use.
He shall be found,
And taken or proscrib'd this happy ground. Dryden.
PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribere.] One that dooms to destruction.
The triumvir and proscriber had defended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden.
PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [from proscriptio, Lat.] Doom to death or confiscation.
You took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription. Shakespeare.
Sylla's old troops
Are needy and poor; and have but left t' expect From Catiline new bills and new proscriptions. B. J. Ins.
For the title of proscription or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon.
PROSE. n. f. [from prosa, Fr. prosa, Lat.] Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discourse not metrical.
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
The reformation of prose was owing to Boccace, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue, though many of his phrases are become obsolete. Dryden.
A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more diffuse. Add.
Prose men alone for private ends,
I thought, forsook their ancient friends. Prior.
I will be still your friend in prose:
Esteem and friendship to express,
Will not require poetick dress. Swift.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse man and prose man, term me which you will. Pope.
To PROSECUTE. v. a. [from prosequere, prosecutio, Lat.]
1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Shakespeare.
He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent fallies. Locke.
2. To continue; to carry on.
The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward.
All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free. Daniel.
He indicted Oxford, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon.
With louder cries
She prosecutes her griefs, and thus replies. Dryden.
3. To proceed in consideration or disquisition of any thing.
It were an infinite labour to prosecute those things, to far as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker, b. iv. f. 1.
4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.
5. To prosecute differs from to persecute: to persecute always implies some cruelty, malignity or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.
PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecutio.]
1. Pursuit; endeavour to carry on.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail, jade, and tire in the prosecution. South.
Their jealousy of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their averrions towards us. Addison.
2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.
PROSECUTOR. n. f. [from prosecutio.] One that carries on any thing; a pursuer of any purpose; one who pursues another by law in a criminal cause.

PROSELYTE

PRO

PROSELYTE. n. f. [προσelyτης; proselite, Fr.] A convert; one brought over to a new opinion.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselite. Cleaveland.
Men become professors and combatants for those opinions they were never convinced of, nor proselites to. Locke.
Where'er you tread,
Millions of proselites behind are led,
Through crowds of new-made converts fill you go. Gravio.
What numbers of proselites may we not expect. Addison.
TO PROSELYTE. v. a. To convert. A bad word.
Men of this temper cut themselves off from the opportunities of proselitizing others, by averting them from their company.
PROSEMINATION. n. f. [proseminatio, Lat.] Propagation by seed.
Touching the impossibility of the eternal succession of men, animals or vegetables by natural propagation or prosemination, the reasons thereof shall be delivered. Hale.
PROSEMIAN. n. f. [from prosemy.] One skilled in metre or prosody.
Some have been to bad proseminians, as from thence to derive malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil. Brown.
PROSODY. n. f. [προσodie, Fr. προσodie.] The part of grammar which teaches the found and quantity of syllables, and the measures of verse.
PROSOPOEIA. n. f. [προσopoeia; prosopoeia, Fr.] Personification; figure by which things are made persons.
These reasons are pathetically urged, and admirably raised by the prosopoeia of nature speaking to her children. Dryden.
PROSPECT. n. f. [prospectus, Lat.]
1. View of something distant.
Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a freer prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Decay of Piety.
It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.
2. Place which affords an extended view.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
Thus spake. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
3. Series of objects open to the eye.
There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surinam, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.
4. Object of view.
Man to himself
Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.
Present, sad prospect! can he ought defray,
But what affects his melancholy eye?
The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast. Prior.
5. View into futurity: opposed to retrospect.
To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.
Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.
6. Regard to something future.
Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life. Tilleyson.
TO PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Lat.] To look forward. Diſt.
PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.]
1. Viewing at a distance.
The French king and king of Sweden are circumspect, industrious and prospective too in this affair. Child.
TO PROSPER. v. a. [prosper, Lat.] To make happy; to favour.
Kind gods, forgive
Me that, and prosper him. Shakespeare. King Lear.
All things concur to prosper our design;
All things to prosper any love but mine. Dryden.
TO PROSPER. v. n. [prosper, Fr.]
1. To be prosperous; to be successful.
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing where I sent it. If.
This man encircled by little and little, and things prosper with him more and more. 2 Mac. viii. 3.
Surer to prosper, than property
Could have assur'd us. Milton.

PRO

2. To thrive; to come forward.
All things do prosper best, when they are advanced to the better; a nursery of flocks ought to be in a more barren ground, than that whereunto you remove them. Adrian.
The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.
She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom. Addison.
PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Lat. prosperite, Fr.] Success; attainment of wishes; good fortune.
Prosperity, in regard of our corrupt inclination to abuse the blessings of Almighty God, doth prove a thing dangerous to the souls of men. Hobbes, b. vi. c. 26.
God's justice reaps that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
PROSPEROUS. adj. [prosperus, Lat.] Successful; fortunate.
Your good advice, which still hath been both grave and prosperous. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Either state to bear prosperous or adverse. Milton.
May he find
A happy passage, and a prosperous wind. Denham.
PROSPEROUSLY. adv. [from prosperus.] Successfully; fortunately.
Prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
In 1596, was the second invasion upon the main territories of Spain, prosperously achieved by Robert earl of Essex, in concert with the earl of Nottingham. Bacon.
Those, who are prosperously united, are inclined to paucity; but afflicted virtue is flattered with reproaches. Dryden.
PROSPEROUSNESS. n. f. [from prosperus.] Prosperity.
PROSPICIENCY. n. f. [from prospicio, Lat.] The act of looking forward.
PROSTERNATION. n. f. [from prosterno, Lat.] Dejection; depression; state of being cast down; act of casting down. A word not to be adopted.
Pain interrupts the cure of ulcers, whence are stirred up a fever, watching, and prosternation of spirits. Wiemann.
PROSTHESIS. n. f. [προσθησις.] In surgery, that which fills up what is wanting, as when fistulous ulcers are filled up with flesh. Diſt.
TO PROSTITUTE. v. a. [prostituere, Lat. prostituere, Fr.]
1. To sell to wickedness; to expose to crimes for a reward. It is commonly used of women sold to whoredom by others of themselves.
Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore. Levi. xix. 29.
Marrying or prostituting,
Rape or adultery. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Who shall prevail with them to do that themselves which they beg of God, to spare his people and his heritage, to prostitute them no more to their own sinister designs. D. of Pi.
Affections, consecrated to children, husbands, and parents, are vilely prostituted and thrown away upon a band at loo. Add.
2. To expose upon vile terms.
It were unfit, that so excellent and glorious a reward, as the gospel promises, should stoop down like fruit upon a full laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand, that heaven should be prostituted to foolish men. Tilleyson.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostitutus, Lat.] Vicious for hire; sold to infamy or wickedness; sold to whoredom.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
By sloth corrupted, by disorder fed,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread. Prior.
PROSTITUTION. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A hiring; a mercenary; one who is set to sale.
At open fullsome bawdry they rejoice,
Bale prostitution! thus dost thou gain thy bread. Dryden.
No hiring thee, no prostitution to praise. Pope.
2. [Prostitution, Lat.] A publick trumpet.
From every point they come, as from a trumpet.
Then dread no dearth of prostitutions at Rome. Dryden.
PROSTITUTION. n. f. [prostitution, Fr. from prostitui.]
1. The act of setting to sale; the state of being set to sale.
2. The life of a publick trumpet.
An infamous woman, having passed her youth in a most shameful state of prostitution, now gains her livelihood by seducing others. Addison's Spectator.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostitutus, Lat.] The accent was formerly on the first syllable.
1. Lying at length.
Once I saw with dread oppressed
Her whom I dread; so that with prostitute lying,
Her length the earth in love's chief cloathing dressed. Shakespeare.
He heard the western lords would undermine His city's wall, and lay his towers prostitute. Spenser.
Before fair Britomart the fell prostitute by,
Groveling and prostitute on yon lake of fire. Milton.
2. Lying at length.
Look gracious on thy prostitute thrall.
3. Thrown down in humblest adoration.
The warning sound was no sooner heard, but the churches were filled, the pavements covered with bodies prostitute, and washed with tears of devout joy. To.

PRO

Let us to the place
Repairing where he judg'd us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent; and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg. Milton.
While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind virtuous drops just gath'ring in my eye. Pope.
TO PROSTRATE. v. a. [prostratus, Lat.]
1. To lay flat; to throw down.
In the streets many they flew, and fixed divers places, prostrating two parishes almost entirely. Hayward.
A storm that all things doth prostrate,
Finding a tree alone all comfortable, Spenser.
Beats on it strongly, it to ruinate,
Snake and bind up your weakest plants against the winds, before they come too fiercely, and in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Bowlyn's Calendar.
The drops falling thicker, faster, and with greater force, beating down the fruit from the trees, prostrating and laying corn growing in the fields. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. [Prostratus, Fr.] To throw down in adoration.
Some have prostrated themselves an hundred times in the day, and as often in the night. Duppa.
PROSTRATION. n. f. [prostration, Fr. from prostrare.]
1. The act of falling down in adoration.
Nor is only a relapsed prostration unto antiquity, a powerful enemy unto knowledge, but any confident adherence unto prostration, a brutish senseless devotion; managed with a greater prostration of reason than of body. South's Sermons.
2. Dejection; deprecation.
A sudden prostration of strength or weakness attends this colic. Arbutnot.
PROSTRATE. n. f. [prostratus, Fr. prostratus.] A building that has only pillars in the front. Diſt.

PROTRACTIVE.

PRO

PROTRACTIVE, adj. [from protract.] Dilatory; delaying; spinning to length.

Our works are nought else
But the protractiv trials of great Jove;
To find perfidious constancy in men.

Shakef.

He suffer'd their protractiv arts,
And strove by mildness to reduce their hearts.

Dryden.

PROTRETICAL, adj. [from protretos.] Hortatory; suatory.
The means used are partly didactical and protretical; demonstrating the truths of the gospel, and then urging the professors to be steadfast in the faith, and beware of infidelity.

Ward on Infidelity.

TO PROTRUDE, v. a. [from protrudo, Lat.] To thrust forward.
When the stomach has performed its office upon the food, it protrudes it into the guts, by whose peristaltic motion it is gently conveyed along.

Vain insolence.

Dryden.

TO PROVE, v. a. [from probo, Lat. prover, Fr.]

Arbuthnot on Animals.

1. To evince; to show by argument or testimony.
Let the trumpet found,
If none appear to prove upon thy person
T'hy helious, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge; I'll prove it on thy heart.

Shakef.

So both their deeds compar'd this day shall prove.
Smile on me, and I will prove.
Wonder is shorter liv'd than love.

Milton.

If it prove any thing, it can only prove against our author, that the assignment of dominion to the eldest is not by divine institution.

Waller.

In spite of Luther's declaration, he will prove the text upon him.

Locke.

2. To try; to bring to the test.
Wilt thou thy idle rage by reason prove?
Or speak those thoughts, which have no power to move!

Sandy.

Thy overpraising leaves in doubt
The virtue of that fruit, in thee first prov'd.

Milton.

3. To experience.
Delay not the present, but Filling the air with swords advanced, and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Shakef. Coriolanus.

Could sense make Marius fit unboun'd, and prove
The cruel lancing of the knotty gout.
Well I defy'd Evander's scorn to prove,
That to ambition sacrific'd my love.

Davies.

Let him in arms the pow'r of Turnus prove,
And learn to fear whom he disdain'd to love.

Waller.

TO PROVE, v. n.

Dryden.

And prowls and filcheth by day. Taffer.

Nor do they seem so quietly the loss of some parcels confiscated abroad, as the great detriment which they suffer by some prowling vice-admiral or public minister. Raleigh.

As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey. Milton.

Shall he, who looks erect on heav'n,
E'er stoop to mingle with the prowling herd,
And dip his tongue in gore. Thomson.

And here the fell attorney prowls for prey. Anon.

PROWL. n. f. [from prowl.] One that roves about for prey.

On churchyards drear,
The shrouded body from the grave. Thomson.

PROXIMATE. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next in the series of ratiocination; near and immediate; opposed to remote and mediate.

Writing a theory of the deluge, we were to shew the proximate natural causes of it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Substance is the remote genus of bird, because it agrees not only to all kinds of animals, but also to things inanimate; Cauter.

PRU

but animal is the proximate or nearest genus of bird, because it agrees to fewest other things. Watts's Logick.

PROXIMATELY. adv. [from proximate.] Immediately; without intervention.

The consideration of our mind, which is incorporeal, and the contemplation of our bodies, which have all the characters of excellent contrivance; these alone easily and proximately guide us to the wife author of all things. Bentley.

PROXIM. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next; immediate.

A syllogism is made up of three propositions, and these of three terms variously joined: the three terms are called the remote matter of a syllogism, the three propositions the proxime or immediate matter of it. Watts's Logick.

PROXIMITY. n. f. [from proximitas, from proximus, Lat.] Nearness.

When kingdoms have customably been carried by right of succession, according to proximity of blood, the violation of this course hath always been dangerous. Hayward.

If he plead proximity of blood,
That empty title is with ease withstood. Dryden.

Add the convenience of the situation of the eye, in respect of its proximity to the brain, the feat of common sense. Ray.

I can call to my assistance. Prior.

Proximity, mark that, and distance. Prior.

Mult we send to stab or poison all the popish princes, who have any pretended title to our crown by the proximity of blood? Swift's Miscellanies.

PROXY. n. f. [By contraction from procurator.]

1. The agency of another.

2. The substitution of another; the agency of a substitute; appearance of a representative.

None acts a friend by a deputy, or can be familiar by proxy. South's Sermons.

Had Hyde thus fat by proxy too,
As Venus once was said to do,
The painter must have search'd the skies,
To match the lustre of her eyes. Grawell.

3. The person substituted or deputed.

A wife man will commit no business of importance to a proxy, where he may do it himself. L'Estrange.

PRUCE. n. f. [Pruce is the old name for Prussia.] Prussian leather.

Some leathern bucklers use
Of folded hides, and others shields of pruce. Dryden.

PRUDE. n. f. [from prude, Fr.] A woman over nice and scrupulous, and with false affectation.

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
In fear of mischief, still on earth to roam. Pope.

Not one careless thought intrudes,
Lest modest than the speech of prudes. Swift.

PRUDENCE. n. f. [from prudencia, Fr. prudencia, Lat.] Wisdom applied to practice.

Under prudence is comprehended, that discrete, apt, suiting, and disposing as well of actions as words, in their due place, time and manner. Peacham.

Prudence is principally in reference to actions to be done, and due means, order, season, and method of doing or not doing. Hale.

PRUDENT. adj. [from prudens, Fr. prudens, Lat.]

1. Practically wise.

The simple inherit folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge. Prov. xiv. 18.

Motives are only prudential, and not demonstrative. Tillotson.

These virtues, though of excellent use, some prudential rules it is necessary to take with them in practice. Rogers.

PRUDENTIALS. n. f. Maxims of prudence or practical wisdom.

Many flanzas, in poetick measures, contain rules relating to common prudentials, as well as to religion. Watts.

PRUDENTIALLY. n. f. [from prudential.] Eligibility on principles of prudence.

Being incapable rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression. Brown.

PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudential.] According to the rules of prudence.

If he acts piously, soberly and temperately, he acts prudentially and safely. South's Sermons.

PRUDENTLY. adv. [from prudens.] Discreetly; judiciously.

PRY

Such deep designs of empire does he lay
O'er them, whose cause he seems to take in hand;
And prudently would make them lords at sea,
To whom with ease he can give laws by land. Dryden.
PRUDERY. n. f. [from prude.] Overmuch nicety in conduct.
PRUDISH. adj. [from prude.] Affectedly grave.
I know you all expect, from seeing me,
Some formal lecture, spoke with prudish face. Garrick.
To PRUNE. v. a. [of unknown derivation.]
1. To lop; to divert trees of their superfluities.
So lop'd and pruned trees do flourish fair. Davies.
Let us ever extol
His bounty, following our delightful task,
To prune those growing plants, and tend these flow'rs. Milt.
What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night with wanton growth derides,
Tending to wild.
Horace will our superfluous branches prune,
Give us new rules, and set out harp in tune. Waller.
You have no less right to correct me, than the same hand that raised a tree, has to prune it. Pope.
2. To clear from excrescences.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloy his beak. Shaksp.
Many birds prune their feathers; and crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The mule, whose early voice you taught to sing,
Preen'd her heights, and pruned her tender wing. Pope.
To PRUNE. v. n. To dress; to prink. A ludicrous word.
Every scribbling man
Grows a lop as fast as e'er he can,
Prunes up, and asks his oracle the glass,
If pink or purple best become his face. Dryden.
PRUNE. n. f. [prune, prunus, Fr. prunum, Lat.] A dried plum.
In drying of pears and prunes in the oven, and removing of them, there is a like operation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRUNEL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PRUNELLO. n. f.

PRUVINGIOUS. adj. [prurio, Lat.] Tending to an itch.
To PRY. v. n. [of unknown derivation.] To peep narrowly;
to inspect officiously, curiously, or impertinently.
I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Intending deep suspicion. Shaksp. Richard III.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two sons heads. Shaksp.
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state. Shaksp.
We of th' offending side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And stop all sight holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us. Shaksp.
He that pryeth in at her windows, shall also hearken at her doors. Eclips. xiv. 23.
And pry
In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton.
We have naturally a curiosity to be prying and searching into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.
Search well
Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape, Left hid in some th' arch hypocrite escape. Dryden.
I wak'd, and looking round the bow'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r,
If any where by chance I might esp'y
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way.
Actions are of so mixt a nature, that as men pry into them, so observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them. Addison.

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying? Addison.
PSALM. n. f. [psalmus, pleume, Fr. psalmus.] A holy song.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Sternhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse. Peachment.
Those just spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms
Singing continually.
In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, Fr. from psalm.] Writer of holy songs.
How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the Pagans scheme in Virgil, where one deity is represented as railing a storm, and another as laying it? Addison.
PSALMODY. n. f. [psalmodie, Fr. psalmody.] The act or practice of singing holy songs.
PSALMOGRAPHY. n. f. [psalmographie, Fr. psalm and graphein.] The act of psalms; a psalmbook.

PSALTERY. n. f. A kind of harp beaten with sticks.
The trumpets, flutes, psalteries and fifes
Make the sun dance. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Praise with trumpets, pierce the skies,
Praise with harps and psalteries. Sandys's Paraph.
The sweet finger of Israel with his psalter, loudly resounded the benefits of the almighty creator. Peachment.
Nought shall the psalter and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
PSUEDO. n. f. [from ψευδης.] A prefix, which, being put before words, signifies false or counterfeit: as, psuedopistle, a counterfeit apostle.
PSUEDOGRAPHY. n. f. False writing.
I will not pursue the many psuedographies in use, but shew of how great concern the emphasis were, if rightly used. Held.
PSUEDOLOGY. n. f. [ψευδολογια.] Falschood of speech.
It is not according to the found rules of psuedology, to report of a pious prince, that he neglects his devotion, but you may report of a merciful prince, that he has pardoned a criminal who did not deserve it. Arbutnot.
PSHAW. interj. An expression of contempt.
A peevish fellow has some reason for being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all with pilches and pschaws. Spektator, N° 439.
PTISAN. n. f. [ptisane, Fr. ptisane.] A medical drink made of barley decocted with raisins and liquorice.
Thrice happy were those golden days of old,
When dear as Burgundy the ptisane fold;
When patients chose to die with better will,
Than breathe and pay the apothecary's bill. Garth.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisane and cream of barley. Arbutnot.
PTYALISM. n. f. [ptyalismos, Fr. πτυαλισμος.] Salivation; effusion of spittle.
PTYSMAGOGUE. n. f. [πτυσμογυα and αγωγη.] A medicine which discharges spittle. Ditt.
PUBERTY. n. f. [puberté, Fr. pubertas, Lat.] The time of life in which the two sexes begin first to be acquainted.
The cause of changing the voice at the years of puberty seemeth to be, for that when much of the moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the ipermatical vessels, it leaveth the body more hot than it was, whence cometh the dilatation of the pipes. Bacon.
All the carnivorous animals would have multiplied exceedingly, before these children that escaped could come to the age of puberty. Bentley's Sermon.
PUBESCENCE. n. f. [from pubescere, Lat.] The state of arriving at puberty.
Solon divided it into ten septenaries; in the first is deden-tation or falling of teeth, in the second pubescence. Brown.
PUBESCENT. adj. [from pubescens, Lat.] Arriving at puberty.
That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
PUBLICAN. n. f. [from publicus, Lat.]

language.
PUBLICATION. n. f. [publico, Lat.]
1. The act of publishing; the act of notifying to the world;
divulgation; proclamation.
For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary, that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excellency termed preaching. Hooker.
2. Edition;

PUB

2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.
An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookseller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.
The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.
PUBLIC. adj. [publicus, publicus, Fr. publicus, Lat.]
1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private.
By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
Born only to be victims of the state;
Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Gravill.
Have we not able counsellors, hourly watching over the publick weal. Swift.
2. Open; notorious; generally known.
Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matth.
3. General; done by many.
A dismal universal his, the sound
Of publick scorn. Milton.
4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.
They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, so they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.
All nations that grew great out of little or nothing, did so merely by the publick mindedness of particular persons. South.
A good magistrate must be endued with a publick spirit, that is with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all selfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Atterbury.
5. Open for general entertainment.
The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.
PUBLICK. n. f. [from publicus, Lat. le publicus, Fr.]
1. The general body of mankind, or of a state or nation; the people.
The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Add.
2. Open view; general notice.
Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fashion. Locke.
In private grief, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Graville.
In publick 'tis they hide,
Where none distinguish. Pope.
PUBLICLY. adv. [from publick.]
1. In the name of the community.
This has been so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are publickly offered for its supply. Addison.
2. Openly; without concealment.
Sometimes also it may be private, communicating to the judges some things not fit to be publickly delivered. Bacon.
PUBLICKNESS. n. f. [from publick.]
1. State of belonging to the community.
The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.
2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.
PUBLICKSPIRITED. adj. [publick and spiritus.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.
'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publickspirited motions in the conception. L'Estrange.
These were the publickspirited men of their age, that is,
patriots of their own interest. Dryden.
Another publickspirited project, which the common enemy could not foresee, might set King Charles on the throne. Add.
It was generous and publickspirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing, without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.
To PUBLISH. v. a. [publio, Fr. publico, Lat.]
1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.
How wilt this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have published me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation, which he came to publish. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.
Th' unwearied sun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Addison's Spectator.
2. To put forth a book into the world.
If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.
PUBLISHER. n. f. [from publish.]
1. One who makes publick or generally known.

PUD

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Shaksp.
The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Atterbury.
2. One who puts out a book into the world.
A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.
PUCELAGE. n. f. [French.] A state of virginity. Ditt.
PUCK. n. f. [perhaps the same with pug.] Some sprite among the fairies, common in romances.
O gentle puke, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shaksp.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for puke is busy in these oaks,
And this is fairy ground. Corbet.
PUCKBALL or puckball. n. f. [from puke the fairy, a fairy's ball.]
A kind of mushroom full of dust. Ditt.
To PUCKER. v. a. [from puke the fairy; as effluvia, from eluv; or from puke, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into corruga-tions; to contract into folds or plications.
I saw a hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spektator, N° 192.
A ligature above the part wounded is pernicious, as it puckers up the intestines, and disorders its situation. Sharp.
PUDDER. n. f. [This is commonly written pother. See POTHER. This is most probably derived by Mr. Lye from puddur, Hindick, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulent and irregular buffle.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies. Shaksp. King Lear.
What a pudder is made about essences, and how much is all knowledge pestered by the careless use of words? Locke.
To PUDDER. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult;
to make a buffle.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from names, and setting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, puddering and confusion, which has so much hindered knowledge. Locke.
To PUDDER. v. z. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.
He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and pudder him. Locke.
PUDGING. n. f. [pudden, Welsh, an intestine; pudding, French; pudding, Swedish.]
2. A kind of food very variously compounded, but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.
Salads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian spark's guitar;
And if I take Dan Congreve right, Pudding and beef make Britons fight. Prior.
2. The gut of an animal.
Hell yield the crow a pudding one of these days; the king has kill'd his heart. Shaksp. Henry V.
As sure as his guts are made of puddings. Shaksp.
3. A bowl stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.
Mind neither good nor bad, nor right nor wrong,
But eat your pudding, slave, and hold your tongue. Prior.
PUDGINGPIE. n. f. [pudding and pie.] A pudding with meat baked in it.
Some cry the covenant, instead
Of puddingpies and gingerbread. Hudibras.
PUDGINGTIME. n. f. [pudding and time.]
1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.
2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars that still protects the stout,
In puddingtime came to his aid. Hudibras.
PUDGLE. n. f. [from puddles, Lat. Skinner; from puil, dirt, old Bavarian, Junius; hence puil.] A small muddy lake;
a dirty pash.
The Hebrews drink of the well-head, the Greeks of the stream, and the Latins of the puddle. Hall.
Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beafts would cough at. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
A physician cured madmen thus; they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puddle, 'till brought to their wits. L'Estr.
Treading where the treacherous puddle lay,
His heels flew up; and on the grassy floor
He fell, belmeard with filth. Dryden's Virgil.
Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacridy, ran through every puddle, and took care to return covered with dirt.
To PUDGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to pollute with dirt; to mix dirt and water.
As if I saw my fun shine in a puddled water, I cried out of nothing but Mopla. Sidney.
Some

PUF

- Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakesp. Othello.
His beard they fing'd off with brand of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Shakesp.
The noblest blood of Africk
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though derived from the same source, thy current Is pudd'd and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.
PUDDLY. adj. [from puddle.] Muddy; dirty; miry.
Limy, or thick puddly water killeth them. Carew.

chastity. Diët.
PUEFFLOW. n. f. A partner.
This carnal cur
Preys on the ill of his mother's body;
And makes her puffedown with others moan. Shakesp.
PUELL. n. f. [puella, Fr. puerilis, Lat.] Childish; boyish.
I looked upon the mansion with a veneration mixt with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puerile amusements. Pope.
PUERILITY. n. f. [puerilitas, Fr. from puerilitas, Lat.] Childishness; boyishness.
A reserve of puerility not shaken off from school. Brown.
Some men imagining themselves possessed with a divine fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puerilities. Dryden's Dufresney.
PUEY. n. f. A kind of water fowl.
Among the first fort are coots, fanderlings and pueys. Car.
The fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant and the puey. Walton's Angler.
PUFF. n. f. [puff, Dutch, a blast which swells the cheeks.]
1. A quick blast with the mouth.
In garret vile, he with a warming puff Regales chill'd fingers. Philips.
2. A small blast of wind.
The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puff of wind stooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that she instantly sunk. Raleigh.
The naked breathless body lies,
To every puff of wind a slave.
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wise. Flatman.
A puff of wind blows off cap and wig. L'Estrange.
There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.
With one fierce puff he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self-discover'd infant lay. Dryden.

Like foggy South puffing with wind and rain. Shakesp.
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakesp.
3. To blow with coolness.
Some puff at these instances, as being such as were under a different economy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. South's Sermons.
It is really to defy heaven, to puff at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its worst. South.
4. To breathe thick and hard.
Seld's down flamins
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
The ass comes back again, puffing and blowing, from the chafe. L'Estrange.
A true son of the church
Came puffing with his greasy bald-pate choir,
And fumbling o'er his beads. Dryden.
5. To do or move with hurry, tumour, or tumultuous agitation.
More unconstant than the wind, who woes
E'en now the frozen bosom of the North,
And, being anger'd, puff away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shakesp.
Then came brave glory puffing by
In silks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.
6. To young; younger; later in time.
A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puffing matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

PUIL

- TO PUFF. v. a.
1. To swell as with wind.
Let him fall by his own greatness;
And puff him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Denham's Sophy.
Flattering of others, and boasting of ourselves, may be referred to lying; the one to please others, and puff them up with self-conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Ray on the Creation.
2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.
I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his ranks into the air,
And from his arm puff'd his own brother. Shakesp.
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat? Shakesp.
Th' unerring fun by certain signs declares,
When the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away.
Dryden's Virgil's Georgics.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue?
If they a little breath should raise,
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puff'd away the monarch's praise?
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-flander could puff away. Pope.
3. To drive with a blast of breath scornfully.
When she dances in the wind,
And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd. Dryd.
4. To swell or blow up with praise.
The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of jurisdiction, being truly parasitic curia, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.
5. To swell or elate with pride.
His look like a cockcomb up puff'd with pride. Tupper.
This army, led by a tender prince,
Whole spirit with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Think not of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puff'd up one against another. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
Did not your honour, but their own advance.
Who stands fast? tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd posterity?
The Phœacians were to puff'd up with their constant felicity, that they thought nothing impossible. Brown.

Look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the pow'r and puissance of the king. Shakesp.
Our puissance is our own; our own right hand Shall teach us highest deeds. Milton.
PUISSANT. adj. [puissant, Fr.] Powerful; strong; forcible.
The queen is coming with a puissant host. Shakesp.
Told the most piteous tale of Lear
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life Began to crack. Shakesp. King Lear.
For pity renown'd and puissant deeds. Milton.
The climate of Syria, the far distance from the strength of Christendom, and the near neighbourhood of those that were most puissant among the Mahometans, caused that famous enterprise, after a long continuance of terrible war, to be quite abandoned. Raleigh's Essays.
PUISSANTLY. adv. [from puissant.] Powerfully; forcibly.
PUKE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] Vomit; medicine

handfomeness; quality opposite to deformity.
Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals, wherein there is an approved pulchritudo. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pulchritudo is conveyed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which refines it. More.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritudo of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.
That there is a great pulchritudo and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray on the Creation.
TO PULE. v. n. [puler, Fr.]

by securely. Mic. ii. 8.
I rent my cloaths, and pulled off the hair from off my head. Ezra. viii. 71.
5. TO PULL DOWN. To subvert; to demolish.
Although it was judg'd in form of a statute, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated, and his houses pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignomy. Bacon.
In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Howell's Vocal Forest.
When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds worlds. Burn.
6. TO PULL DOWN. To degrade.
He begs the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
To raise the wretched, and pull down the proud. Recom.
What title has this queen but lawless force?
And force must pull her down. Dryden.
7. TO PULL UP. To extirpate; to eradicate.
What censure, doubting thus of innate principles, I may deserve from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.
PULL. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of pulling; pluck.
This wrestling pull between Corineus and Gogmagog is reported to have befallen at Dover. Carew.
Duke of Glo'ster, scarce himself,
That bears to throw a main; two pulls at once; Shakesp.
His lady banish'd, and a lamb kept off.

—Simple of itself, I'll no pullet sperm in my brewage. Sha.
I felt a hard tumour on the right side, the bigness of a pullet's egg. Wife's Surgery.
They died not because the pullets would not feed, but because the devil forelaw their death, he contrived that abstinence in them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PULLEY. n. f. [poullie, Fr.] A small wheel turning on a pivot, with a furrow on its outside in which a rope runs.
Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and, in three hours, I was raised and hung into the engine. Guliver.
Here pulleys make the pond'rous oak ascend. Gay.
TO PULLULATE. v. n. [pullulus, Lat. pullulus, Fr.] To geminate; to bud.
PULMONARY. adj. [from pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small in respect of that of the heart. Arbutnot.
Cold air, by its immediate contact with the surface of the lungs, is capable of producing defluxions upon the lungs, ulcerations, and all sorts of pulmonick consumptions. Arbutnot.
PULMONARY. n. f. [pulmonaire, Fr.] The herb lungwort. Ans.
PULMONICK. adj. [pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
An ulcer of the lungs may be a cause of pulmonick consumption, or consumption of the lungs. Harvey.
PULP. n. f. [pulpa, Lat. pulpe, Fr.]
1. Any soft mass.
The jaw bones have no marrow fever'd, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The soft part of fruit; the part of fruit distinct from the seeds and rind.
The favour pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream. Milton.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also by a secondary intention for the sustenance of man and other animals. Ray.
The grub
Oft unobliv'd invades the vital core,
Pernicious tenant, and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp
Of aleis. Philips.
PULPIT. n. f. [pulchrum, Lat. pulpitre, pulpitre, Fr.]
1. A place raised on high, where a speaker stands.
Produce his body to the market-place,
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
2. The higher desk in the church where the sermon is pronounced; distinct from the lower desk where prayers are read.
We see on our theatres, the examples of vice rewarded, yet it ought not to be an argument against the art, any more than the impieties of the pulpit in the late rebellion. Dryden.
Sir

PUL

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit cloth, and railed in the communion table. Addison's Spectator, N^o 112.
Bishops were not wont to preach out of the pulpit. Ayliffe.
Pulps their sacred fatyr learn'd to spare,
 And vice admir'd to find a flatter there. Pope.
PULPOUS. adj. [from pulp.] Soft.
 The redbreast's pulpous fruit
 With gold irradiate, and vermilion shines. Philips.
PULPOUSNESS. n. f. [from pulpous.] The quality of being pulposus.
PULPY. adj. [from pulp.] Soft; pappy.
 In the walnut and plums is a thick pulpy covering, then a hard shell, within which is the seed. Ray on the Creation.
 Putrefaction destroys the specifick difference of one vegetable from another, converting them into a pulpy substance of an animal nature. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
PULSATION. n. f. [from pulsare, Fr. pulsar, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.
 This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choaked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.
PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulsare, Lat.] A striker; a beater.
PULSE. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.]
 1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.
Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; because fluids, when they are pressed, press again to all sides, and their pressure is always perpendicular to the sides of the containing vessels; but the coats of the artery, by any small impetus, may be distended: therefore, upon the contraction or systole of the heart, the blood from the left ventricle will not only press the blood in the artery forwards, but both together will distend the sides of the artery: when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart: this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; for, while the blood is thrust out of the heart into the artery, the artery being full, the blood must move in all the arteries at the same time; and because the arteries are conical, and the blood moves from the base of the cone to the apex, therefore the blood must strike against the sides of the vessels, and consequently every point of the artery must be dilated at the same time that the blood is thrown out of the left ventricle of the heart, and as soon as the elasticity of the spiral fibres can overcome the impetus of the blood, the arteries are again contracted: thus two causes operating alternately, the heart and fibres of the arteries, keep the blood in a continual motion: an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a flow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.
 Think you, I hear the fears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakspeare.
 The prosperity of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Clarendon.
 My body is from all diseases free;
 My temperate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.
 If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arbuthnot.
 2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.
 The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflexion, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.
 3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.
 4. [From puls.] Leguminous plants.
 With Elijah he partook,
 Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.
 Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain!
 While corn and pulse by nature are bestow'd. Dryden.
 Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulses. Mort.
TO PULSE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.
 The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time. Ray.
PULSION. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward; in opposition to suction or traction.
 Admit it might use the motion of pulsion, yet it could never that of attraction. More's Divine Dialogues.

PUM

By attraction we do not here understand what is improperly called so, in the operations of drawings, sucking and pumping, which is really pulsion and traction. Bacon.
PULVERABLE. adj. [from pulveris, Lat.] Possible to be reduced to dust.
 In making the first ink, I could by filtration separate a pretty store of a black pulverable substance that remained in the fire. Boyle on Colours.
PULVERIZATION. n. f. [from pulverizare, Lat.] The act of powdering; reduction to dust or powder.
TO PULVERIZE. v. a. [from pulveris, Lat. pulveriser, Fr.] To reduce to powder; to reduce to dust.
 If the experiment be carefully made, the whole mixture will float into fine crystals, that seem to be of an uniform substance, and are consistent enough to be even brittle, and to endure to be pulverized and sifted. Boyle.
PULVERULENCE. n. f. [from pulverulentia, Lat.] Dustiness; abundance of dust.
PULVIL. n. f. [from pulvillum, Lat.] Sweet scents.
 The toilette, nursery of charms,
 Completely furnish'd with bright beauty's arms,
 The patch, the powder-box, pulvils, perfumes. Gay.
TO PULVIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.
 Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not stink of the stable. Congreve's Way of the World.
PUMICE. n. f. [from pumex, pumicis, Lat.]
 The pumice is evidently a flag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, and only reduced to this state by the violent action of fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities, found in masses of different sizes and shapes, of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found in many parts of the world, but particularly about the burning mountains Etna, Veluvius and Hecla: it is used as a dentifrice. Hill's Materia Medica.
 So long I float, that all was spent,
 Though pumice stones I hastily hent,
 And threw; but nought avail'd.
Etna and Veluvius, which consist upon sulphur, float forth smoke, ashes and pumice, but no water. Bacon.
 Near the Lucrine lake,
 Steams of sulphur raise a stifling heat,
 And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Addison.
PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.
PUMP. n. f. pampe, Dutch and French.]
 1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.
 A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you pour a little water into it first. More's Antidote against Atheism.
 In the framing that great ship built by Hero, Athenus mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water though very deep. Willkins's Decadus.
 These pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double for two. Martinet.
 2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.
 Get good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakspeare Midsummer Night's Dream.
 Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakspeare.
 Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular.
 Thalia's ivy shews her prerogative over comical poetry; her mask, mantle and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Peacock.
 The water and sweat
 Splish splash in their pumps. Swift's Miscel.
TO PUMP. v. n. [from pompe, Dutch.] To work a pump; to throw out water by a pump.
 The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.
TO PUMP. v. a.
 1. To raise or throw out by means of a pump.
 2. To examine artfully by fly interrogatories, so as to draw out any secrets or concealments.
 The one's the learned knight, seek out,
 And pump them what they come about. Hudibras.
 Ask him what passes
 Amongst his brethren, he'll hide nothing from you;
 But pump not me for politics. Orway's Venice Preserv'd.
PUMPER. n. f. [from pump.] The person or the instrument that pumps.
 The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.
PUMPFION. n. f. A plant.
 The flower of the pumpion consists of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, expanded at the top, and cut into several segments: of these flowers some are male, and some female, as in the cucumbers and melons: the female flowers grow upon the top of the embryo, which afterwards becomes an oblong or round fleshy fruit, having sometimes an hard, rugged and uneven uneven rind, with knobs and furrows, and is often divided into three parts, inclosing flat seeds that are edged or rimmed about as it were with a ring, and fixed to a spongy placenta. Miller.

 We'll use this gross watry pumpion, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare Merry Wives of Windsor.
PUN. n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced: to pun, is to grand or beat with a peggle; can pun mean an empty found, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?] An equivocation; a quibble; an expression where a word has at once different meanings.
 It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: cuniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.
 But fill their puris, our poet's work is done,
 Alike to them by pathos, or by pun. Pope.
TO PUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.
 The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggrel, or who pun'd in prose. Dryden.
 You would be a better man, if you could pun like Sir Trifflum. Tatler, N^o 57.
TO PUNCH. v. a. [from poinçonner, Fr.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.
 When I was mortal, my anointed body
 By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shakspeare.
 By reason of its constitution it continued open, as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wifeman's Surgery.
 Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge, you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Maxon.
 The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the crura, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray on the Creation.
PUNCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A pointed instrument, which, driven by a blow, perforates bodies.
 The flank of a key the punch cannot strike, because the flank is not forged with substance sufficient; but the drill cuts a true round hole. More's Mechanical Exercises.
 2. [Cant word.] A liquor made by mixing spirit with water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.
 The West India dry gripes are occasioned by lime juice in punch. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
 No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.
 3. [Punchinello, Italian.] The buffoon or harlequin of the puppet-show.
 Of rarefactions he sung and punch's feats. Gay.

 Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.
 2. Exact; nice; punctilious.
 A gentleman punctual of his word, when he had heard that two had agreed upon a meeting, and the one neglected his hour, would say of him, he is a young man then. Bacon.
 This mistake to avoid, we must observe the punctual differences of time, and so distinguish thereof, as not to confound or lose the one in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Bro.
 He was punctual and just in all his dealings. Atterbury.
 The correspondence of the death and sufferings of our lord is so punctual and exact, that they seem rather like a history of events past, than a prophecy of such as were to come. Rogers.
PUNCTUALITY. n. f. [from punctualis.] Nicety; scrupulous exactness.
 For the encouragement of those that hereafter should serve other princes with that punctuality as Sophronio had done, he commanded him to offer him a blank, wherein he might set down his own conditions. Howell's Vocal Forget.
 Though some of these punctualities did not so much conduce to preserve the text, yet all of them shew, the infinite care which was taken, that there might be no mistake in a single letter. Grew's Copinol.
PUNCTUALLY. adv. [from punctualis.] Nicely; exactly; scrupulously.
 There were no use at all for war or law, if every man had prudence to conceive how much of right were due both to and from himself, and were wilful to punctually just as to perform what he knew requisite, and to rest contented with his own. Raleigh's Essays.
 Concerning the heavenly bodies, there is so much exactness in their motions, that they punctually come to the same periods to the hundredth part of a minute. Ray on the Creation.
 I freely bring what Moses hath related to the text, comparing it with things as now they stand; and finding his account to be punctually true, I fairly declare what I find. Woodward.
PUNCTUALNESS. n. f. [from punctualis.] Exactness; nicety.
 The most literal translation of the scriptures, in the most natural signification of the words, is generally the best; and the same punctualness which debaseth other writings, pre-serve the spirit and majesty of the sacred text. Felton.
PUNCTUATION. n. f. [from punctum, Lat.] The act or method of pointing.
 It ought to do it willingly, without being forced to it by any change in the words or punctuation. Addison.
PUNCTURE. n. f. [from punctus, Lat.] A small prick; a hole made with a very sharp point.
 With the loadstone of Laurentius Guaficus, whatsoever needles or bodies were touched, the wounds and punctures made thereby were never felt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way being cut through, they are irrecoverable; but when pricked by a sharp-pointed weapon, which kind of wound is called a puncture, they are much to be regarded. Wifeman.
TO PUNCTULATE. v. n. [from punctulum, Lat.] To mark with small spots.
 The fluids have their surface punctulated, as if set all over with other fluids infinitely lesser. Woodward.

PUNGAR. n. f. [from pungus, Lat.] A fish.
PUNGENCY. n. f. [from pungent.]
 1. Power of pricking.
 Any substance, which by its pungency can wound the worms, will kill them, as steel and hartshorn. Arbuthnot.
 2. Heat on the tongue; acridness.
 3. Power to pierce the mind.
 An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, the persuasiveness of promises, pungency of menaces, or prospect of mischiefs upon neglect can be. Hamm.
 4. Acrimoniousness; keenness.
 When he hath considered the force and pungency of these expressions applied to the fathers of that Nicene synod by the Western bishops, he may abate his rage towards me. Stillingsfi.
PUNGENT. adj. [from pungens, Lat.]
 1. Pricking.
 Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew;
 A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
 The gnomes direct to every atom just,
 The pungent grains of stinging dust. Pope's Ra. of the Lock.
 2. Sharp on the tongue; acid.
 Do not the sharp and pungent tastes of acids arise from the strong attraction, whereby the acid particles rush upon, and agitate the particles of the tongue. Newton's Opticks.
 3. Piercing;

PUN

3. Piercing; sharp.
Thou canst let him on the rack;
Incise him in a wooden tower;
With pungent pains on every side;
So Regulus in torments dy'd.
Swift's Miscellanies.

TO PUNISH. v. a. [puniſ, Lat.]
1. To chastise; to afflict with penalties or death for some crime.
Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches Are punished with. Shakeſp. King Lear.
If you will not hearken, I will punish you seven times more for your sins. Lev. xxvi. 18.
2. To revenge a fault with pain or death.
PUNISHABLE. adj. [punishable, Fr. from puniſh.] Worthy of punishment; capable of punishment.
Theft is naturally punishable, but the kind of punishment is positive, and such lawful, as men shall think with discretion convenient to appoint. Hooker, b. iii. f. 9.
Six creatures, which have no understanding, can chew no will; and where no will is, there is no fin; and only that which fineth, is subject to punishment; which way should any such creature be punishable by the law of God? Hooker.
Their bribery is less punishable, when bribery opened the door by which they entered. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
PUNISHABLENESS. n. f. [from puniſhable.] The quality of deserving or admitting punishment.
PUNISHER. n. f. [from puniſh.] One who inflicts pains for a crime.
This knows my punisher; therefore as far
From granting me, as I from begging peace. Milton.
PUNISHMENT. n. f. [punishment, Fr.] Any infliction imposed in vengeance of a crime.
The house of endless pain is built thereby;
In which ten thousand sorts of punishments
The cursed creatures do eternally torment. Pa. Queen.
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
I never gave them condign punishment. Shakeſp.
Thou, through the judgment of God, shalt receive just punishment for thy pride. 2 Mac. vii. 36.
Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? Jab. xxxi. 3.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat.
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established, as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice, against whatever pleasure or pain this life can give.
PUNITION. n. f. [punition, Fr. punitio, Lat.] Punishment. Anſw.
PUNITIVE. adj. [from punitio, Lat.] Awarding or inflicting punishment.
Neither is the cylinder charged with sin, whether by God or men, nor any punitive law enacted by either against its rolling down the hill. Hammond's Fundamentals.
PUNITORY. adj. [from punitio, Lat.] Punishing; tending to punishment.
PUNK. n. f. A whore; a common prostitute; a strumpet.
She may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. Shakeſp. Measure for Measure.
And made them fight, like mad or drunk;
For dame religion as for punk. Hudibras.
Near these a nursery erects its head,
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry.
Where infant punks their tender voices try. Dryden.
PUNSTER. n. f. [from pun.] A quibbler; a low wit who endeavours at reputation by double meaning.
His mother was cousin to Mr. Swan, gamester and punster of London. Arbutnot and Pope.
TO PUNT. v. n. To play at ballet and ombre.
One is for setting up an assembly for ballet, where none shall be admitted to punt, that have not taken the oaths. Add.
When a duke to Janſen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they. Pope.
PUNY. adj. [puiſ, Fr.]
1. Young.
2. Inferior; petty; of an under rate.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakeſp. Rich. II.
Know me not,
Left that thy wives with spurs, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Drive
The puny habitants; or if not drive,
Seduce them to our party. Milton.

PUP

This friendship is of that strength, as to remain unshaken by such assaults, which yet are strong enough to shake down and annihilate the friendship of little puny minds.
Love at their head ascending from the sea.
A shoal of puny powers attend his way. Dryden.
PUP. n. f. A young inexperienced unseasoned wretch.
Tenderness of heart makes a man but a puny in this so; it spoils the growth, and cramps the crowning exploits of his vice. South's Sermons.
TO PUP. v. n. [from puppy.] To bring forth whelps; to lead of a bitch bringing young.
PUPIL. n. f. [pupilla, Lat.]
1. The apple of the eye.
Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and let before us, till the pupil of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray on the Creation.
The uvea has a mucilous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. Meyer.
The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses. Newton's Opticks.
2. [Pupilla, Fr. pupillus, Lat.] A scholar; one under the care of a tutor.
My master fues to her, and she hath taught her tutor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shakeſp.
One of my father's servants,
With store of tears this treason gan unfold,
And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Parter.
If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Raleigh.
Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Eſt.
The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.
3. A ward; one under the care of his guardian.
Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles,
What are the grounds
To undertake to young so vast a care? Dryden.
So some weak fool, whose life would poorly fill,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupil loſting juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tickel.
PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]
1. State of being a scholar.
The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.
2. Wardship; minority.
Three sons he dying left, all under age,
By means whereof their uncle Vortigern
Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;
Which the infant's tutors gathering to fear,
Them closely into Armorick did bear. Rail's Quere.
PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaris, Fr. pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.]
Pertaining to a pupil or ward.
PUPPET. n. f. [puppet, Fr. puppe, Lat.]
1. A small image moved by men in a mock drama; a wooden tragedian.
Once Zelmane could not stir; but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion flood only upon her pleasure, Basilus with servicable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney, b. ii.
Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets.
His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and compliance; as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The guided puppets dance. Pope.
In fond impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.
2. A word of contempt.
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be thrown
In Rome as well as I. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.
Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet! Shakeſp.
PUPPETMAN. n. f. [puppet and man.] Master of a puppet-show.
Why is a handsome wife ador'd
By every coxcomb but her lord?
From yonder puppetman inquire,
Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.
PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.] A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.
Tim, you have a taste I know,
And often see a puppetshow.
To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow. Arbutnot and Pope.
A pre-

PUR

A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the light of a puppetshow. Pope.
PUR. n. f. [pury, Fr.]
1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.
He Talks as familiarly of roaring lions, as you used to leard A
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. Shakeſp.
The rogues lighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen of their litter. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The sow to the bitch says, your puppies are all blind. L'Eſt.
Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,
Till the bright fun has nine times set and rose. Gay.
2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.
I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster;
a most curvy monster! Shakeſp. Tempst.
Thus much I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out.
I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm. Addison's Guardian.
TO PUR. v. n. [from pury.] To bring whelps.
PURBLIND. adj. [corrupted from perblind, which is still used in Scotland; pore and blind.] Nearighted; shortighted.
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname to her purblind son and heir. Shakeſp.
The truth appears to naked on his side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakeſp.
'Tis known to several
Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes
Perchance, are to this business purblind.
Like to purblind moles, no greater light than that little which they shun. Dryden.
Darkness, that here surrounded our purblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day.
Dropt in clear thick-lighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, though purblind in the light. Hudibras.
Purblind man
Sees but a part of th' chain, the nearest links;
His eyes not carrying to that equal beam,
That shines all above. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
PURBLINDNESS. n. f. [from purblind.] Shortness of sight.
PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.] That may be purchased or bought.
Money being the counterbalance to all things purchasable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, so much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.
TO PURCHASE. v. a. [purchase, Fr.]
1. To buy for a price.
You have many a purchas'd slave,
Which like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part.
His sons buried him in the cave, which Abraham purchas'd of the sons of Heth. Shakeſp. Gen. xxv.
2. To obtain at any expense, as of labour or danger.
A world who would not purchase with a bruise. Milton.
3. To exiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses,
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none. Shakeſp. Remes and Juliet.
PURCHASE. n. f. [purchas, old Fr. from the verb.]
1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.
He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke on Education.
Our thriving dean has purchas'd land;
A purchase which will bring him clear
Above his rent four pounds a year.
2. Any thing of which possession is taken.
A beauty waiting and distressed widow Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakeſp.
The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his stores; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Eſt.
PURCHASER. n. f. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.
Upon one only alienation and change, the purchaser is to pass both licence, fine and recovery. Bacon.
So unhappy have been the purchasers of church lands, that, though in such purchases, men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.
Most of the old statues may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners, than they are to a modern purchaser. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PURE. adj. [pur, pure, Fr. purus, Lat.]

There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness. Prov. xxx. 12.
2. Clear; not dirty; not muddy.
Thou purst stone, whole pureness doth present
My purest mind. Sidney, b. ii.

PUR

3. Unmingled; not altered by mixtures; mere.
What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is hal'd to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much a kin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts's Logick.
4. Not connected with any thing extrinsic; as, pure mathematics.
Mathematicks in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed;
and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Wilkins.
When a proposition expresses that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition; as every true christian is an honest man. Watts.
5. Free; clear.
His mind of evil pure
Supports him, and intention free from fraud. Philips.
6. Free from guilt; guiltless; innocent.
Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Prov. xx. 9.
O welcome pure eye'd faith,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
No hand of strife is pure, but that which wins. Daniel.
7. Incorrupt; not vitiated by any bad practice or opinion.
Her guileless glory just Britannia draws
From pure religion, and impartial laws. Tickel.
8. Not vitiated with corrupt modes of speech.
As oft as I read those comedies, so oft doth found in mine ear the pure fine talk of Rome. Aſham.
9. Mere; as, a pure villain, purus patus nebullo, Lat.
The lord of the castle was a young man of spirit, but had lately out of pure weariness of the fatigue, and having spent most of his money, left the king. Clarendon.
There happened a bloody civil war among the hawks, when the peaceable pigeons, in pure pity and good nature, send their mediators to make them friends again. L'Eſt.
10. Chaste; modest.
PURELY. adv. [from pure.]
1. In a pure manner; not dirtily; not with mixture.
I will purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy iniquity. Isaiah i. 25.
2. Innocently; without guilt.
The being able to raise an army, and conducting it to fight against the kings, was purely due to him, and the effect of his power. Clarendon, b. viii.
Upon the particular observations on the metallick and mineral bodies, I have not founded any thing but what purely and immediately concerns the natural history of those bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
I converse in full freedom with men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as having made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
PURENESS. n. f. [from pure.]
1. Clearness; freedom from extraneous or foul admixtures.
They came to the river side, which of all the rivers of Greece had the prize for excellent pureness and sweetness, in so much as the very bathing in it was accounted exceeding healthful. Sidney.
No circumstances are like to contribute more to the advancement of learning, than exact temperance, great pure-ness of air, equality of climate, and long tranquility of government. Temple.
2. Simplicity; exemption from composition.
An essence eternal and spiritual, of absolute pureness and simplicity. Raleigh.
My love was such,
It could, though he supply'd no fuel, burn;
Rich in itself, like elemental fire.
Whole pureness does no aliment require. Dryden.
3. Innocence; freedom from guilt.
May we evermore serve thee in holiness and pureness of living. Common Prayer.
4. Freedom from vicious modes of speech.
In all this good propriety of words, and pureness of phrases in Terence, you must not follow him always in placing of them. Aſham's Schoolmaster.
PURFILE. n. f. [pouffile, Fr.] A sort of ancient trimming for women's gowns, made of tinsel and thread; called also bobbin work. Bailey.

corate with a wrought or flowered border; to border with embroidery; to embroider.
A goodly lady clad in scarlet red,
Purged with gold and pearl of rich allay. Pa. Queen.

PUR

- Emroid tuffs, flow'rs purpled blue and white;
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knight's hood's bending knee. Shaksp.
Iris there with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers, of more mingled hew,
Than her purpled earl's can shew. Milton.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same, and purpled o'er
With diamonds. Dryden.
PURPLE. n. f. [purpura, Fr. from the verb.] A border of PURPLE. n. f. [purpura, Fr. purpura, Lat.]
PURGATION. n. f. [purgatio, Fr. purgatio, Lat.]

We do not suppose the separation finished, before the pur- gation of the air began. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. The act of cleansing the body by downward evacuation.
Let the physician apply himself more to purgation than to alteration, because the effect is in quantity. Bacon.
3. The act of clearing from imputation of guilt.
If any man doubt, let him put me to my purgation. Shak.
Proceed in justice, which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt of the purgation. Shaksp.
PURGATIVE. adj. [purgativus, Fr. purgativus, Lat.] Cathartic; having the power to cause evacuations downward.
Purgative medicines have their purgative virtue in a fine spirit, they endure not boiling without loss of virtue. Bacon.
All that is fill'd, and all that which doth fill
All the round world, to man is but a pill;
In all it works not, but it is in all Poisonous, or purgative, or cordial. Donne.
Lentent purgatives evacuate the humours. Wise.
PURGATORY. n. f. [purgatorium, Fr. purgatorium, Lat.] A place in which souls are supposed by the papists to be purged by fire from carnal impurities, before they are received into heaven.
Thou thy folk, through pains of purgatory,
Doest bear unto thy bliss. Spenser's Hymn on Love.
In this age, there may be as great instances produced of real charity, as when men thought to get souls out of purga- tory. Stillingsfleet.
TO PURGE. v. a. [purgo, Fr. purgo, Lat.]
1. To cleanse; to clear.
It will be like that labour of Hercules, in purging the stable of Augeas, to separate from superfluous observations any thing that is clean and pure natural. Bacon.
2. To clear from impurities.
To the English court assemble now
From every region aspects of idleness;
Now neighbour confines purge you of your scum. Shaksp.
Air ventilates and cools the mines, and purges and frees them from mineral exhalations. Woodward.
3. To clear from guilt.
Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time
Ere human statute purged the general weal.
My foul is purged from grudging hate;
And with my hand I feel my true heart's love. Shaksp.
The blood of Christ shall purge our conscience from dead works to serve God. Heb. ix. 14.
Syphax, we'll join our cares to purge away
Our country's crimes, and clear her reputation. Addison.
4. To clear from imputation of guilt.
He, I accuse,
Intends t' appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Marquis Dorset was hasting towards him, to purge himself of some accusation. Bacon's Henry VII.

ings, is a principal means of a prolongation of life. Bacon.
If he was not cured, he purged him with salt water. Arbutnot.
7. To clarify; to defecate.
TO PURGE. v. n. To have frequent stools.
PURGE. n. f. [purge, from the verb.] A cathartic medicine; a medicine that evacuates the body by stool.
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us. Shaksp.
Pills nor laxatives I like;
Of these his gain the sharp physician makes,
And often gives a purge, but seldom takes. Dryden.
He was no great friend to purging and clifters; he was for mixing ales with all purges. Arbutnot.
PURGER. n. f. [purger, from purge.]
1. One who clears away any thing noxious.

PUR

- This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious;
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers. Shaksp.
2. Purge; cathartic.
It is of good use in physick, if you can retain the purging virtue, and take away the unpleasant taste of the purger. Lat.
PURIFICATION. n. f. [purificatio, Fr. purificatio, Lat.]
1. The act of making pure; act of cleansing from extraneous mixtures.
I discerned a considerable difference in the operations of feveral kinds of saltpetre, even after purification. Boyle.
2. The act of cleansing from guilt.
The sacraments, in their own nature, are just such as they seem, water, and bread, and wine; but because they are made signs of a secret mystery, and water is the symbol of purification of the soul from sin, and bread and wine, of Christ's body and blood; therefore the symbols receive the names of what they sign. Taylor's Worshy Communion.
3. A rite performed by the Hebrews after childbearing.
PURIFICATIVE. adj. [purificativus, Fr. purificativus, Lat.] Having power or tendency to make pure.
PURIFIER. n. f. [purificator, Fr. purificator, Lat.]

TO PURIFY. v. a. [purifico, Fr. purifico, Lat.]
1. To make pure.
2. To free from any extraneous admixture.
If any bad blood should be left in the klogdom, an honourable foreign war will vent or purify it. Bacon's Henry VII.
The mals of the air was many thousand times greater than the water, and would in proportion require a greater time to be purified. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
By chase our long-liv'd fathers can't their loods,
Toil string the nerves, and purified the blood. Dryden.
3. To make clear.
It ran upon so fine and delicate a ground, as one could not easily judge, whether the river did more wash the gravel, or the gravel did purify the river. Sidney, b. ii.
4. To free from guilt or corruption.
He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people. Tit. ii. 14.
If God gives grace, knowledge will not stay long behind;
since it is the same spirit and principle that purifies the heart, and clarifies the understanding. South's Sermon.
5. To free from pollution, as by lustration.
There were fex fix water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews. Jo. ii. 6.
6. To clear from barbarisms or improprieties.
He saw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sparr.
TO PURIFY. v. n. To grow pure.
We do not suppose the separation of these two liquors wholly finished, before the purification of the air began, though let them begin to purify at the same time. Burnet.
PURITY. n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]
1. One superstitiously nice in the use of words.
PURITAN. n. f. [puritanus, Fr. puritanus, Lat.]
The schism which the papists on the one hand, and the superstition which the puritans on the other, lay to our charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves. Sanders.
PURITANICAL. adj. [puritanicus, Fr. puritanicus, Lat.]
Such guides let over the several congregations will mislead them, by infilling into them puritanical and superstitious principles, that they may the more securely exercise their preby-terian tyranny. Watson.
PURITANISM. n. f. [puritanismus, Fr. puritanismus, Lat.]
A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me. Watson.
PURITY. n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]
1. Cleanness; freedom from foulness or dirt.
Her urn
Pours streams select, and purity of waters. Prior.
From the body's purity, the mind Receives a secret aid. Thomson's Summer.
2. Freedom from guilt; innocence.
Death sets us safely on shore in our long-expected Canaan, where there are no temptations, no danger of falling, but eternal purity and immortal joys secure our innocence and happinefs for ever. Wake's Preparation for Death.
3. Chastity; freedom from contamination of sexes.
Could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and her marriage vow. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
PURITY. n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]
1. This is justly supposed by Minghea to be contracted from puritas.
1. An embroidered and puckered border.
Himself came in next after a triumphant chariot made of carnation velvet, enriched with pur and pearls. Sidney.
The juggling of pinks is like the inequality of oak leaves;
but they seldom have any small pur. Bacon.
2. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of medicated male liquor, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused.
TO PURIFY.

PUR

- TO PURL. v. n. [of this word it is doubtful what is the primitive signification; if it is referred originally to the appearance of a quick stream, which is always dimpled on the surface, it may come from pur, a pucker or fringe; but if, as the use of authors seem to show, it relates to the sound, it must be derived from purra, Swedish, to murmur, according to Mr. Lye.] To murmur; to flow with a gentle noise.
Tones are not so apt to procure sleep, as some other sounds;
as the wind, the purling of water, and humming of bees.
Instruments that have returns, as trumpets; or flexions, as cornets; or are drawn up, and put from, as factubs, have a purling sound; but the recorder or flute, that have none of these inequalities, give a clear sound. Bacon.
All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet, or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milton.
My flow'ry theme,
A painted mistle, or a purling stream. Pope.
Around th' adjoining brook, that purles along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock. Thomson.
TO PURLE. v. a. To decorate with fringe or embroidery.
When was old Sherwood's head more quaintly curl'd,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and purld. B. Johnson.
PO'RLING. n. f. The grounds on the borders of a forest; border; inclosure.
In the purlius of this forest stands
A sheepcote, fence'd about with olive trees. Shaksp.
Such civil matters fall within the purlius of religion. L'Estr.
To understand all the purlius of this place, and to illustrate this subject, I must venture myself into the haunts of beauty and gallantry. Spektator.
He may be left to rot among thieves in some stinking jail, merely for mistaking the purlius of the law. Swift.
A party next of glit'ring dames, Thrown round the purlius of St. James,
Came early out. Swift.
PURLIUS. n. f. In architecture, those pieces of timber that lie across the rafters on the inside, to keep them from sinking in the middle of their length. Bailey.
TO PURLOIN. v. a. [this word is of doubtful etymology.
Shimmer deduces it from pur and loin, French; Mr. Lye from purlouhnan, Saxon, to lie hid.] To steal; to take by theft.
He, that brave deed there finding ready dress,
Purloin'd both steel and spear, and ran away full light. F. 2.
The Arimaspian by stealth
Had, from his waktful custody, purloin'd
The guarded gold. Milton.
They not content like felons to purloin,
Add treason to it, and debate the coin. Denham.
Some writers make all ladies purloin'd,
And knights purloining like a whirlwind. Hudibras.
When did the muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whole Ethridge dost transfuse to thine? Dryden.
Your butler purloins your liquor, and the brewer sells your hog-wash. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
Prometheus once this chain purloin'd, Dissoild, and into money sold. Swift.
PURLOINER. n. f. [purloin, from purloin.] A thief; one that steals clandestinely.
It may seem hard, to see publick purloiners sit upon the lives of the little ones, that go to the gallows. L'Estrange.
PURPARTY. n. f. [purpart, Fr. purpart, Lat.] Share; part in division.
Each of the coparceners had an entire county allotted for her purparty. Davies on Ireland.
PURPLE. adj. [purpure, Fr. purpureus, Lat.]
1. Red inclur'd with blue.
The poop was beaten gold,
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd, that
The winds were love-sick with c'm. Shaksp.
You violets, that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known;
What are you when the rose is blown?
A small oval plate, cut off a flinty pebble, and polished, is prettily variegated with a pale grey, blue, yellow, and purple. Woodward on Fossils.
2. In poetry, red.
I view a field of blood,
And Tyber rolling with a purple flood.
Their mangled limbs
Crashing at once, death dyes the purple seas
With gore. Thomson's Summer.
TO PURPLE. v. a. [purpure, Lat.] To make red; to colour with purple.
Whiff your purpled hands do reek and smok, Fulfil your pleasure. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
Cruel and suddain, hast thou since Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
Though fall'n on evil days,
In darkness, and with dangers compass'd round,
And solitude I yet, not alone, whilst thou Villit't my slumbers nightly; or when morn Purples the East. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xxx.

PUR

- Throw hither all your quaint enamel'd eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honied show'rs,
And purple all the ground with vernal flow'rs. Milton.
Aurora had but newly chas'd the night,
And purpled o'er the sky with blushing light. Dryden.
Not with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
The sun fifth rises o'er the purpled main. Pope.
Reclining soft in blissful bow'rs,
Purpled sweet with springing flow'rs. Penton.
PURPLES. n. f. [without a singular.] Spots of a livid red, which break out in malignant fevers; a purple fever.
PURPURISH. adj. [from purple.] Somewhat purple.
I could change the colour, and make it purplish. Boyle.
PURPORT. n. f. [purpor, Fr. purpor, Lat.] Design; tendency of a writing or discourse.
That Plato intended nothing less, is evident from the whole scope and purport of that dialogue. Norris.
TO PURPORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to tend to show.
There was an article against the reception of the rebels, purporting, that if any such rebel should be required of the prince confederate, that the prince confederate should command him to avoid the country. Bacon's Henry VII.
They in moist grave and solemn wife unfolded Matter, which little purported, but words
PURPOSE. n. f. [propositus, Fr. propositum, Lat.]
1. Intention; design.
He quit the house of purpose, that their punishment Might have the freer course. Shaksp. King Lear.
Change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. Shaksp.
He with troops of horsemen beset the passages of purpose, that when the army should set forward, he might in the streights, fit for his purpose, set upon them. Knolles.
And I persuade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow, were not his purpose.
To use him farther yet. Milton's Agonistes.
St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this very purpose. Burn.
They, who are desirous of a name in painting, should read and make observations of such things as they find for their purpose. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
He travelled the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men. Guardian, N^o 165.
The common materials, which the ancients made their ships of, were the ornus or wild ash; the fir was likewise used for this purpose. Arbutnot.
I do this, on purpose to give you a more sensible impression of the imperfection of your knowledge. Watson.
Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
2. Effect; consequence.
To small purpose had the council of Jerusalem been afsembled, if once their determination being set down, men might afterwards have defended their former opinions. Hosker.
The ground will be like a wood, which keepeth out the sun, and so continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze, to purpose that year. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Their design is a war, whenever they can open it with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.
Such first principles will serve us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with, as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Locke.
He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Collier on Desires.
What the Romans have done is not worth notice, having had little occasion to make use of this art, and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed from Aristotle. Baker.
3. Instance; example.
'Tis common for double-dealers to be taken in their own snates, as for the purpose in the matter of power. L'Estr.
TO PURPOSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to design;
to resolve.
What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform. Hosker.
It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the nobility. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
I am purpose'd, that my mouth shall not transgress. Pf. xvii.
This is the purpose that is purpose'd upon the whole earth. Jl. xiv. 26.
Paul purpose'd in the spirit, to go to Jerusalem. Acts xix. 21.
The christian captains, purpose'd to retire home, placed on each side of the army four ranks of waggons. Knolles.
The whole included race his purpose'd prey. Milton.
Oaths were not purpose'd more than law,
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras.
Doubling my crime, I promise and deceive, Purpose to slay, whilst swearing to forgive. Prior.

PURPOSELY.

PUR

- PURPOSELY, adv. [from purpose.] By design; by intention. Being the instrument which God hath purposefully framed, thereby to work the knowledge of salvation in the hearts of men, what cause is there wherefore it should not be acknowledged a most apt mean? Hooker.
- I have purposefully avoided to speak any thing concerning the treatment due to such persons. Addison.
- In composing this discourse, I purposefully declined all offensive and displeasing truths. Atterbury.
- The vulgar thus through imitation err,
As oft the learned by being singular;
So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposefully go wrong. Pope.
- PURPRISE, n. f. [from purpuris, old Fr. purprijum, law Lat.] A clove or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manour.

The fame of ancient matrons you pursue,
And stand a blameless pattern to the new. Dryden.
 4. To endeavour to attain.
Let us not then pursue Splendid vassalage. Milton.
We happiness pursue; we fly from pain;
Yet the pursuit, and yet the flight is vain. Prior.

PUR

- TO PURSUE, v. n. To go on; to proceed.
I have, purpues Carneades, wondered chymists should not consider.
- PURSUER, n. f. [from pursume.] One who follows in hostility.
Fled with the rest,
And falling from a hill he was to bruis'd,
That the pursuers took him. Shakep. Henry IV.
His swift pursuers from heav'n's gates discern
Th' advantage, and descending tread us down Thus drooping. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Like a declining statesman left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.
- PURSUITE, n. f. [from pursumo, Fr.]
1. The act of following with hostile intention.
Arm, warriors, arm for fight! the foe at hand,
Whom fled we thought, will have us long pursuit. Milton.
 2. Endeavour to attain.
This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd. Dryden.
Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit. Roger.
He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation. Addison.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them. Locke.
 3. Prosecution.
He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it. Clarendon.
- PURSUIVANT, n. f. [from pursumo, Fr.] A state messenger;
an attendant on the heralds.
- How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The fitting skies, like flying pursuivants. Fairy Queen.
Pursuivants he often for them sent. Chaucer.
These grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. Shakep.
Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising. Shakep. Richard III.
For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmond Bolton, Gerard Leigh, John Ferne, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pursuivants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory. Candian's Remains.
- The pursuivants came next,
And like the heralds each his cushion bore. Dryden.
- PURSY, adj. [from pursumo, Fr.] Shortbreathed and fat.
- In the fatness of these pursum times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea croud and woo for leave to do it good. Shakep.
Now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And pursum insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight. Shakep. Timon of Athens.
By these, the Medes Perfume their breaths, and cure old pursum men. Temple.
An hostels dowager,
Grown fat and pursum by retail
Of pots of beer and bott'd ale. Hudibras, p. iii.
- PURTEANCE, n. f. [from pursumo, Fr.] The pluck of an animal.
- Roast the lamb with fire, his head with his legs and with the purteance thereof. Ex. xii. 9.
The shaft against a rib did glance,
And gall'd him in the purteance. Hudibras, p. i.
- TO PURVEY, v. a. [from purveo, Fr.]
1. To provide with conveniences. This sense is now not in use.
Give no odds to your foes, but do purvey
Yourself of sword before that bloody day. Fa. Queen.
His house with all convenience was purvey'd,
The rest he found. Dryden.
 2. To procure.
What though from outmost land and sea purvey'd
For him; each rarer tributary life Bleeds not. Tobson's Summer.
- TO PURVEY, v. n. To buy in provisions.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purvey'd. Milton.
- PURVEYANCE, n. f. [from purveo.]
1. Provision.
Whence mounting up, they find purveyance meet
Of all, that royal princes court became. Fa. Queen.
 2. Procurement of victuals.
Some lands be more changeable than others; as for their lying near to the borders, or because of great and continual purveyances that are made upon them. Bacon.

PURVEYOR.

PUS

- PURVEYOR, n. f. [from purveo.]
1. One that provides victuals.
The purveyors or victuallers are much to be condemned, as not a little faulty in that behalf. Raleigh.
 2. A procurer; a pimp.
These women are such cunning purveyors!
Mark where their appetites have once been pleased,
The same resemblance in a younger lover,
Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures. Dryden.
The stranger, ravi'd at his good fortune, is introduced to some imaginary title; for this purveyor has her representatives of some of the finest ladies. Addison.
- PURVIEW, n. f. [from purveo, French.] Provifo; providing clause.
- Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals in parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition. Hale's Common Law of England.
- PURULENCE, n. f. [from purulent.] Generation of pus or purulency; matter.
- Consumptions are induced by purulency in any of the viscera. Arbutnot on Diet.
- PURULENT, adj. [from purulent, Fr. purulentus, Lat.] Consisting of pus or the running of wounds.
- A carcase of man is most infectious and odious to man, and purulent matter of wounds to found flesh. Bacon.
- It spews a filthy froth
Of matter purulent and white,
Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting on a wound, Spreads leprosy. Swift's Miscel.
- An acrimonious or purulent matter, stagnating in some organ, is more easily deposited upon the liver than any other part. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- PUS, n. f. [Latin.] The matter of a well digested food.
- Acrid substances break the vessels, and produce an ichor instead of laudable pus. Arbutnot.
- TO PUSH, v. a. [from pusho, Fr.]
1. To strike with a thrust.
If the ox push a man-servant, he shall be stoned. Ex. xxi.
 2. To force or drive by impulse of any thing.
The youth push away my feet. Jeb. xxx. 12.
 3. To force not by a quick blow, but by continued violence.
Shew your mended faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual flame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land. Shakep.
Through thee will we push down our enemies. Pf. xlv. 5.
Waters forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.
The description of this terrible scene threw her into an hy-stercic fit, which might have proved dangerous, if Cornelius had not been push'd out of the room. Arbutnot and Pope.
 4. To press forward.
He forewarns his care
With rules to push his fortune or to bear. Dryden.
With such impudence did he push this matter, that when he heard the cries of above a million of people begging for their bread, he termed it the clamours of faction. Addison.
Arts and sciences, in one and the same century, have arrived at great perfection, and no wonder, since every age has a kind of universal genius, which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies, the work then being push'd on by many hands, must go forward. Dryden.
 5. To urge; to drive.
Ambition pushes the soul to such actions, as are apt to procure honour to the actor. Addison's Spectator.
 6. To enforce; to drive to a conclusion.
We are push'd for an answer, and are forced at last freely to confess, that the corruptions of the administration were intolerable. Swift.
 7. To importune; to tease.
TO PUSH, v. n.
1. To make a thrust.
But illues, ere the fight, his dread command,
That none shall dare
With shorted sword to stab in clover war,
Nor push with biting point, but strike at length. Dryden.
A calf will so manage his head, as though he would push with his horns even before they shoot. Roy.
Lambs, though they never saw the actions of their species, push with their foreheads, before the budding of a horn. Addison.
 2. To make an effort.
War seem'd asleep for nine long years; at length
Both sides resolv'd to push, we try'd our strength. Dryden.
 3. To make an attack.
The king of the South shall push at him, and the king of the North shall come against him. Dan. xi. 40.
- PUSH, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Thrust; the act of striking with a pointed instrument.

PUS

- No might his corse be harmed
With dint of sword or push of pointed spear. Spenser.
- So great was the puillance of his push,
That from his saddle quite he did him bear. Fa. Queen.
- They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach, receiving them with deadly shot and push of pike, in such furious manner, that the Turks began to retire. Knolles.
2. An impulse; force impressed.
Jove was not more
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas
To give it the first push, and see it roll Along the vast abyis. Addison's Guardian.
 3. Assault; attack.
He gave his countenance against his name,
To laugh with gybing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative. Shakep. Henry IV.
